DENTISTRY.

DR. STEPHEN BAILY,
Office No. 198 Pennsylvania Avenue,
Three doors from 14th street.

DR. BAILY begs leave to inform the public that he can be seen at all hours, at his office, located as above. He feels assured that an experience of fifteen years' practice, with the large number of patients, and great variety of difficult cases that he has treated successfully, will enable him to surmount any difficulty, scientific or otherwise, relating to the Teeth. His own experience confirming the opinion of many men eminent in the profession, and especially Drs Harris and J. and E. Parmly, has led him, long since, to discard all mercurial preparations for filling Teeth, also all Enamels, Gutta Percha, India Rubber, and Cements for the construction of Continuous Gum Teeth, and that Porcelain, mounted on Gold Plate, is the only reliable substance that can be worn in the mouth, as was most conclusively shown by the last American Dental Convention.

Although he flatters himself that from his long residence and practice in Washington, he is favorably known to his numerous friends and patrons, he begs leave to refer them to the following

TESTIMONIALS.

From the late Rector of the Church of Epiphany of this city.

Dr. STEPHEN BAILY: Dear Sir—I desire to express my esteem for you personally, and my confidence in you as a superior dentist. The operations executed for me have been highly satisfactory. I hope that you may receive the patronage from my friends and the public that your skill so well deserves. Yours very truly,
Washington, August 26, 1856. J. W. FRENCH.

From one of the oldest firms in Baltimore, Messrs. Boggs, Colman & Co.

Having employed Dr. Stephen Baily, Surgeon Dentist, of Washington City, to execute for me, an important and difficult piece of work, which he did to my entire satisfaction, and in view of the fact that one of the most distinguished members of the Dental College of Baltimore, failed, after repeated trials, to perform the same work satisfactorily, it gives me great pleasure to express my entire confidence and high estimation of his professional skill.
Baltimore, January 13, 1857. HARMANN BOGGS.

Extract from a note received from the late Hon. John M. Clayton.
U. S. SENATE, August 19, 1856.
The teeth you made for me work admirably; nothing could be better. Very gratefully, JOHN M. CLAYTON.

To those that seek relief from the maladies of the teeth, I can cheerfully recommend Dr. S. Baily, as a superior Dentist; he made a set of porcelain teeth for one of my family, and plugged several teeth for myself, and the work has all stood well for more than ten years. ROBERT T. NIXON, of the Va. Conference of the M. E. Church South.
April 19, 1856.

We, the undersigned, having had occasion to avail ourselves of the professional skill of Dr. S. Baily, Surgeon Dentist, of this city; or having been cognizant of his operations on our families or friends, take pleasure in expressing our admiration of his artistic skill, as well as of the uniformly satisfactory manner in which he performs the most delicate and difficult operations in Dental Surgery; and we respectfully recommend him to the confidence and patronage of the public; of which we consider him eminently worthy.

DR. MUNSON, AT 338 PENN'A AVENUE, is still making those beautiful continuous GUM TEETH, called Allen's Patent, for the excellency of which over all other styles of teeth, many now wearing them in this city, will cheerfully vouch.
There is one Dentist in this city who has been infringing the patent, and made a bad imitation of it, against whom I hereby caution the public
N. B. Whenever a Dentist speaks against Allen's Patent Continuous Gum Teeth, when properly constructed, it is because he is ignorant of the process, incompetent to make the work, or a unwilling to pay for the patent. je 16-tf

Maps, profiles, and specifications of materials and work to be let will be ready for examination at this office on and after the 20th April next.
The work to be let will embrace masonry of some of the bridges, graduation, excavation, and embankment of reservoirs, iron pipes connected with the reservoirs, 12-inch iron main, gate houses, bricks, sand, rubble, and cut stone, &c.
For the particular works and and materials reference is made to the specifications and plans.

Portions only of some of the works can be completed under the present appropriation; but all contracts for unfinished work will be subject to future appropriations by Congress. The engineer reserves the right to prescribe the amount of work to be done and rate of progress under each contract for each appropriation; and in case of the appropriation not holding out sufficiently, to decide when and what works shall be stopped until funds become available.
In case of the entire stoppage of any particular work for want of funds, the reserved ten per cent. will be paid, if, in the judgment of the engineer, the work has been properly executed so far as it has gone.
Payments will be made in specie checks upon the United States treasury upon the monthly estimates of the engineer, reserving ten per cent.; and it will be a condition of all contracts that the workmen shall be paid their full wages monthly, and in specie.
All bids should be sealed and endorsed "Proposals for work or materials on the Washington Aqueduct"
The United States reserves the right to reject any or all the bids should they not be deemed advantageous, and to make such arrangements as may be considered most conducive to the progress of the work.
Every offer must be accompanied by a written guarantee, signed by one or more responsible persons to the effect that he or they undertake that the bidder or bidders will, if his or their bid be accepted, enter into an obligation, within ten days, with good and securities, for the completion of the work undertaken; said guarantee to be accompanied by the certificate of the United States district judge, United States district attorney, navy agent, or some officer of the general government or individual known to the Engineer or Department of War, that the guarantors are able to make good their guarantee.
Bids will be opened in presence of bidders, if any of them choose to be present.
M. C MEIGS,
Capt. of Engineers, in charge.

EVENING STAR.

THE BLUE DRAGOON.

In the Dutch town of M——, there resided at the close of the last century, an aged widow known by the name of Madame Andrecht The only occupants of the house, which was the widow's property, were herself and a maid-servant of about the same age. As the widow was in a precarious state of health, she kept no society, and did not leave her room for weeks together. Her only recreation was, that she went in the spring, when the weather was settled, to visit her son, who resided in a neighboring village, and on these excursions she was always accompanied by her servant, who was accustomed to her temper, and was the only nurse she would have about her. During these absences from town the house was uninhabited, and though carefully locked up, not guarded with any special attention.

The widow returned from her annual excursion on the 30th of June, 18—, and found that during her absence the house had been broken into, and besides other valuables, all her plate and jewels carried off. The authorities were immediately informed, and both burgomaster and police began to make a diligent inquiry. It was not difficult to discover how the thieves had broken into the house The window of a back room looked on the garden, and had been secured within by a brass screw on either side A pane of glass had been broken on each side, the screws had been taken out, and they had carried off their plunder by the back door, which was found unfastened. All the other windows were still securely bolted, and several rooms had not even been entered. It was evident that the thieves had set to work in great security, had taken their time, and had not been apprehensive of being disturbed. They had removed the top of a heavy old escritoire, which had been carefully locked, and had lifted out the doors. This operation had been effected so cleverly that there was not the slightest trace of violence Out of this escritoire the jewels and other valuables had been taken Two chests had also been broken open, and gold, silver, and apparel carried off The value of the objects missed amounted to about 2 000 Dutch florins.

It was conjectured that the robbery had been effected by more than one person; it was equally probable that the plan had been matured long before. It was also apparent that the robbery had been committed by persons not unacquainted with the house and the widow's circumstances The widow's house was situated in an outlying street, and was the only respectable one in the neighborhood. Persons in inferior circumstances, and among them several suspicious characters occupied the adjacent houses. At the end of the garden, behind the house, from which side the thieves must have come, ran the inner town ditch, which was navigable and only divided from it by a quickset hedge. The next house was a corner one, and a narrow path ran along its side and the garden hedge to a plank laid across the ditch. It was not supposed, however, that the thieves had climbed over the hedges of the two gardens, but it was much more likely that they had come in a boat to the hedge and climbed over it. No suspicious footsteps could be noticed in the garden walks or flower beds.

The discovery immediately caused great excitement, the whole neighborhood was astir, and a mob of curious persons surrounded the house. The police were compelled to use their utmost efforts to prevent them entering; still one of them, a baker, who lived in the house right opposite the window, had succeeded in finding his way in with the officers, and satisfying his curiosity. His acquaintances, who had seen him enter, awaited his return with impatience to learn from him all that the police would not impart to them. Their hopes were deceived, however, for he maintained an obstinate silence, or only gave equivocal replies. A wool-spinner, Leendert Van N—, who lived in the corner house, was far more talkative. Wherever people put their heads together, he hurried up to them, listened to their conjectures, and favored them with his own; he spoke too, in a very decided manner, and hinted at certain persons and things. His wife did the same among her neighbors in a louder key. She shook her head at one thing, nodded at another, and repeatedly said she would not be surprised if the thieves were carried to prison before night. Among the mob which her husband was honoring with his remarks, was a Jew pedlar, who was constantly visible in the streets with his wares. An acquaintance twitched the wool spinner by the sleeve, and whispered to him that he had better be cautious, for the Jew was a spy The warning came too late. The same morning the wool spinner was summoned to the townhouse, to give the burgomaster an explanation of his suspicious remarks. He hesitated, denied, and tried to evade the question, but when the burgomaster pressed him, he determined on speaking, though he would gladly have saved the persons, who had never done him any injury

At the end of the street in which the wool-spinner lived, a public-house had been opened for several years, kept by a certain Nicholas D—. The people of the town, however, rarely called him by his name, but only spoke of him as the "Blue Dragoon," as he had formerly served in Colonel Von Wakebarth's regiment, whose uniform was of this color. When garrisoned in the town some years before, he had made the acquaintance of Madame Andrecht's former maid, Hanne, whom he eventually married. The girl had been six years in the widow's service, and possessed her entire confidence. As far as was known the old lady had given them the means to open the public house, for neither of them had anything. It was also known that Hanne and her Blue Dragoon, as long as they were unmarried, had had few opportunities of meeting. Consequently Hanne waited, when her mistress had gone to bed, at the house door, and the Blue Dragoon never failed to make his appearance If the weather was fair, they would remain talking there, if bad, Hanne took the liberty of inviting her lover into the house. This did not long remain hidden from the old lady, and she did not approve of it; and she therefore had the street door locked each night before going to bed, and took the keys with her. The lovers, however, were not balked by this; the Blue Dragoon sought a road through the wool-spinner's garden. One evening the latter heard the clang of spurs; he went to the back door hurriedly with a light, and saw Nicholas climbing over the fence of Madame Andrecht's garden. He did not make any disturbance, for he knew of the love affair, and the Blue Dragoon told him laughingly, that he was going to bid his Hanne good night. When, however, the thing went on, and Blue Dragoon climbed over night after night, he put a stop to it

The Blue Dragoon did not climb over any more, yet the wool-spinner saw him in the garden with his Hanne. The enigma was solved one evening when he came home very late, and saw a boat fastened to a post close to Madame Andrecht's garden It was one of them in which the dragoons usually fetched their fodder from the stores, and Nicholas was at that time servant to one of the officers, and attended to his horse. Man and wife laughed heartily at the idea that love will always find a way; and they frequently saw the boat after that under the hedge. Such was the wool-spinner's explanations of the motives which formed the foundation of his suspicions He found, however, more nourishment for them in facts that had recently come to his knowledge. Some ten days before the discovery of the robbery, while the widow was still in the country, he had found a colored pocket handkerchief at the side of the town ditch, close to his neighbor's garden. He put it in his pocket without thinking anything about it. At dinner he told the circumstance to his wife, and showed her the handkerchief, remarking innocently at the same time, "If Madame Andrecht were in town, and Hanne still with her, we should know what it meant. The Blue Dragoon had been courting again, and lost his handkerchief." His wife took it, and pointed to one corner in which N D were marked. Neither of them thought of the circumstance during the following days, till the discovery of the robbery called it to my mind.

Suspicion consequently rested on the Blue Dragoon, and another circumstance materially confirmed it. On the first examination of the house, a partly-burnt spill had been found on the floor near the escritoire. Had Madame Andrecht or her servants used the paper to light a candle, it would not have been thrown on the floor, for their cleanliness was notorious. No other person had entered the house lately, and, had it been so, they would not have dared to transgress in such a way. The police had not smoked, and therefore the thieves could be the only persons who had thrown the spill on this spot. On unfolding the rest of the paper, it was found to be a declaration or receipt for the town for dues on spirits that had been imported. When the spirits had been once carried home, this receipt was of no further use, and the papers were not generally preserved by the landlords. The greater portion of the receipt found in the house was burnt, the name of the landlord was gone, but the lower part was in good condition, and upon it was the signature of the exciseman and the date! It was easy, with these indications, to find out what landlord had declared spirits on that day. The books showed that Nicholas D—— had received many kegs of Geneva. This, in connection with the wool spinner's statement, determined the police to arrest the Blue Dragoon, as well as his family, consisting of his wife, her father and brother, who lived with him. An examination of the house led to the discovery of a "souvenir" behind the shutter of the tap-room window, which undoubtedly belonged to Madame Andrecht, for two letters addressed to her were found in it.

While the whole town was busying itself in forming conjectures on the subject, a respectable tradesman made his appearance before the police and gave the following statement: He was a wool merchant, and among his customers was a carpenter, Isaac Van C——, who was always in arrear with his payments. The merchant pressed him, and at length commenced legal proceedings. A few days before the discov
