Women's Whims.

These women have a roguish way
Of sporting with our hopes and fears,
They love to laugh and joke all day,
And taunt us men with jibes and jeers.
Both teasing, and pleasing
Are they; and as their fancies fly,
They hoax, or they coax, or
They love or hate, or laugh or cry.
But lasses, be they coy or kind,
Though they may think their thoughts are hid,
Are, to a woman, all inclin'd,
To do as their fair mothers did.

These women, too, are like the wind,
Which blows upon the weathercock,
They turn us men as they're inclined,
With coaxing ways, or stormy shock.
No one day, can man say,
That woman's will will steadfast hold,
For any hour to show their pow'r,
They'll kiss or frown, or smile or scold.
But lasses be they coy or kind,
Though they may think their thoughts are hid.
Are, to a woman, all inclin'd,
To do as their fair mothers did.

DELAY OF THE NEWSPAPERS BY THE GREAT WESTERN.—Very great complaints have been made about the delay in obtaining the newspapers from the Great Western yesterday afternoon experienced by all the newspapers in the city. The reason is thus explained. Mr. Hoskins, one of the underlings at the Courier & Enquirer office took a coach at 4 o'clock, for Pike street, at the foot of which he alighted, and went on board the steamship, from which he took all the newspapers, letters, periodicals, &c., placed them in his coach, and returned with them to the Courier office, where such were selected as suited the purposes of that establishment, and the remainder, after a detention of three or four hours, was sent to the Post Office, instead of being forwarded to those to whom they belonged, and who would have received them hours sooner, but for the impertinent interference of this contemptible whippersnapper.

From Washington.

WASHINGTON, April 22, 1838.

Report of the Duel Investigating Committee—Expulsion of Mr. Graves, and censure of the Seconds, &c.

The long agony is over. The committee of investigation in relation to the late duel, have finally made their report, and astonished the whole House. This committee has held its meetings in secret, and been engaged in the investigation for several weeks, with closed doors. Not a whisper has been permitted to escape respecting their decision, or of what has transpired before them while in conclave. The very secretary or clerk was sworn to secrecy, and even after the report had been prepared and all the witnesses examined, not a syllable was known of what would be the result. Late yesterday the rule was suspended to enable the committee to make the Report, which concludes with a resolution recommending the expulsion of Mr. Graves for a breach of privilege, and the censure of the seconds in the duel. The effect was electrical, and after ordering the report to be printed, the House adjourned. A counter report was also submitted by the minority of the committee, which was, likewise, ordered to be printed.

This is, perhaps, the grossest outrage which has been committed, for many years, on the rights of a member. One of the rules of the House requires that when the character of a member will be impeached, or charges brought against it, before any committee, he shall have the privilege of rebutting those charges, and cross examining the witnesses. But in this case, the committee, in direct violation of the rule, has gone into the investigation and made its report, without giving the persons implicated and who are to be expelled and censured, the chance of defending themselves. Wise is quite furious, and Graves laughs at this impotent attempt to destroy him.—People here think, too, it is very strange that the committee should make a report censuring the members of their own body, and even requiring the expulsion of one of them, for an act of which the deceased was as guilty as the survivor, and to whom they ordered funeral honors to be paid, and absolutely attended his body to the grave, and wore the usual mockery of woe on their arms, in honor of his memory, thus approving the act.

This report will not only give rise to great warmth of discussion, but to much heart burning, and may possibly lead to other duels. Webb does not escape scot free—but is exonerated from the offence of a breach of privilege.

Many of the Whigs here disapprove of the letter of Biddle, and object to his making himself the leader of a party. They do not wish to mingle themselves with the Bank question, and think that Biddle was wrong in publishing his letter to Mr. Adams. HORACE.

MANNERS; OR STEAMSHIPS AND NEWSBOATS.—"Holloh! there, you fellows in the boat there, how dare you make fast to this ship? Push off, or d——n your blood, I'll swamp you." All this would be very well among the Blackwall watermen, or the Bristol mud larks; but a little more of the suaviter in modo will be necessary to carry a man comfortably in the harbor of New York, although he did have the luck to come in second best in the race.

CONTINUATION OF ERNEST MALTRAVERS.—The Harper's published yesterday, Alice; or the Mysteries, through which we have hastily ran to catch the plot and the story, but which we must read over and again to drink in the beauty of the sentiment, and the polished elegance of the style. A chord that vibrates through the soul is interwoven with every passage of this most powerful and singular work; the hidden mysteries of our nature, its beauties and its errors, are laid before us, and mentally we quiver at the touch of the hand that unveils to us, in all the deformity of vice, motives and feelings which we are wont to look up to as beautiful and good. The delineations are given with a master's hand, and the sense must be, indeed, opaque, that cannot discover their fidelity. The plot is advanced to its denouement with a versatility of incident and continuously-increasing effect that rivets us to the page. The characters are finely contrasted, and the intermediate shades well filled in. The noble-spirited Maltravers—the beautiful and artless Evelyn—are exquisite pictures, and acquire an absorbing influence over our attention.

ENTHUSIASM IN THE PURSUIT OF LETTERS.—The case of the United States vs. John G. Cobb, came on for trial in the United States Circuit Court at Charleston, on Monday sen'night The prisoner, a mail carrier, was indicted for opening a letter, and abstracting bank notes therefrom, on the 15th of September last, on the mail route, between Camden and Yorkville. The jury found the prisoner guilty. The punishment for the offence, prescribed by act of Congress, is punishment, not less than ten, nor more than twenty-one years.

MORAL PHILOSOPHY.—The landlord of a pot-house in one of the courts running from Drury Lane to Catherine street, (Westminster,) has issued a large placard of the week's "amusements" at his house. After enumerating the concerts, free and-easies, fighting matches, &c., that make up the previous six days, it is added, "Sunday—Humorous investigations, or trial by jury!" [We have something like this at Tammany Hall every Sunday also.]

DIFFERENCE BETWEEN SMALL AND GREAT.—At the City Court at Charleston, on Saturday week, one George Maxwell, for petit larceny, was sentenced to one month's imprisonment, and ten lashes. At the same time, Samuel Gibson, for grand larceny, was awarded three month's imprisonment, and twenty lashes.

☞ All the papers state that General Sutherland has been sentenced to transportation for life to Van Dieman's Land. This is incorrect, as Van Dieman's Land is not a penal settlement, no convict having been ever sent there. He will, most probably, be sent to Bermuda to work on the fortifications, and from thence to Norfolk Island, where the chain gangs are employed.

Triumph of Steam--The Sirius and the Great Western--The passage of the Atlantic in fourteen days!

The excitement yesterday was tremendous; from an early hour in the morning until dark, myriads of persons crowded the Battery to have a glimpse of the first vessel which had crossed the Atlantic from the British isles, and arrived at this port; indeed, it is said, that every Englishman in the city, at one time or other, during the day, was gazing at the dark looking vessel with the American colors at the fore, and the flag of old England at the stern. This excitement was further increased by the arrival of the Great Western, from Bristol, which left that port on the 7th instant, making the passage in fifteen days, thus solving the problem of possibility, and showing what can be done by enterprize, expenditure, courage, and skill, in encountering the stormy weather which these two vessels have so successively braved and surmounted. The Sirius, however, is the pioneer, and to her the glory of the Argonaut is due.

The approach of the "Great Western" to the harbor, and in front of the Battery, was most magnificent. It was about four o'clock yesterday afternoon. The sky was clear—the crowds immense. The battery was filled with the human multitude, one half of whom were females, their faces covered with smiles, and their delicate persons with the gayest attire.—Below, on the broad blue water, appeared this huge thing of life, with four masts, and emitting volumes of smoke. She looked black and blackguard—as all the British steamers generally are—rakish, cool, reckless, fierce, and forbidding in their sombre colors to an extreme. As she neared the Sirius she slackened her movements, and took a sweep round, forming a sort of half circle. At this moment, the whole Battery sent forth a tumultuous shout of delight, at the revelation of her magnificent proportions. After making another turn towards Staten Island, she made another sweep, and shot towards the East River with extraordinary speed. The vast multitudes rent the air with their shouts again, waving handkerchiefs, hats, hurraing to a very great degree. After shewing herself thus, she took up her station at the foot of Market street, at a slip assigned to her, and thus let the thousands rest in quiet.

It is a singular coincidence that both vessels should have arrived on St. George's day, the patron saint of the country to which they belong. Old England will exult in the achievement, and great will be the chuckling among its seamen and mercantile people at this prosperous issue of so great an undertaking. These voyages, it must be remembered, are only experimental ones; the Sirius was not constructed for the passage of the broad sea, and came off on her expedition almost impromptu, and crossed in eighteen days, on eleven of which foul winds prevailed; yet in the eighteen days she ran 3,519 knots! The Great Western was built with more preparation, and has, therefore, accomplished her object more speedily;—but the opinion now is that the distance can and will be run in ten or twelve days, when every thing is arranged and calculated for that purpose.

We have given below the particulars of the construction of the Great Western, as we have previously done of the Sirius and the Royal Victoria, (the name of which has been altered to the British Queen.) And here we may be permitted to remark that we were in error when we stated that the Sirius, now here, was the "pig ship," concerning which an anecdote appeared in the Herald on Sunday week;—the Royal Victoria also is a different vessel from the Victoria on board of which the accident occurred by the bursting of a boiler, as mentioned yesterday morning.

Captain Roberts, of the Sirius, was spoken of in the most complimentary terms by the ladies, his passengers. "They should," they said, "have been dreadfully alarmed by the bad weather, but they felt quite safe when they thought they were under Capt. Roberts' charge, whose celebrity as a steam navigator was proverbial." The cook, who is an authority in such matters, stated that the rolling was very trifling, and not so heavy as in a sailing vessel. In short, nothing could have been more satisfactory for all purposes than this bold expedition, and we trust it will redound to the permanent profit, as it certainly does to the enterprise of all concerned. The results to business, commerce, manners, arts, social life, and the moral approximation of the two hemispheres, we have on divers occasions adverted to, and shall again when we are not so pressed with news. At present, we must conclude with the details relative to the Great Western, from the London literary and scientific journals, only premising that the Sirius and most probably the Great Western will leave this port for London direct, on the 3rd or 5th May.

The Great Western was designed and built, and is owned wholly, we believe, at Bristol; so that the somewhat sleepy but venerable old port, which first, through Cabot, found out the variation in the needle of the mariner's compass, and established the trade between this country and Russia, as well as discovered Newfoundland, and described distinctly the coast of Florida (as many contend) the year before Columbus made his voyage,—Bristol, waking from her Rip Van Winkle slumbers, has had the honor of rousing English enterprise to a new effort of the highest interest, coming very near, too, at the least, to taking the lead, nominally as well as virtually, in that effort herself.

At all events, the Great Western is in itself an achievement sufficient to renew for that ancient city the fame of the days when Maister Canynge's merchant ships were the first on the globe; witness the Mary and John, of 900 tons, 420 years ago. This noble steamer hag a burthen of 1,340 tons. How it compares with the class it belongs to, and with its spry little competitor before mentioned, may be judged by the least seaman like reader we have, when we say, that, as far as we know, the largest steam-ship in Her Majesty's navy, and that a new one, is the Gorgon, with a tonnage of 1150. The Gorgon is constructed to carry 20 days' coal, a crew of 150, and 1000 men besides, and stores for 6 months. Her engines are only of the same power with those of the Sirius. The largest American steam-ship we have heard of, is the Natchez, now or lately on the stocks at New York, and intended to ply as a packet between that city and the southern port whose name she bears; her tonnage is 900. The Wilberforce and the Victoria, Hull packets, were considered to be at the head of the old order of boats; the former a little exceeding 200 feet in length, with paddle-wheels 24 feet in diameter, and engines second only to those used in the American scheme. There may be a farther comparison with the Bristol boat, by stating that her length is about 240 feet; that each paddle-shaft, after turning, weighs 6½ tons, and the intermediate shaft 4½ tons, with diameters of 18½ and 17½ inches; that her cylinders are 73½ inches in diameter—the Gorgon's being 64 inches—and nearly rivalling the size of the hugest ever used in the most extensive operations of the Cornish mines; that she has four boilers, rated to weigh, with the water in them, 180 tons—bordering on a stowage room capable of containing in iron boxes nearly 900 tons of coal; and that her two marine engines are stated to have a 225 horse power each.—To imagine, in a word, the appearance this vessel makes in the river, among the myriad craft which encircle her, one must conceive of a large man of war of 80 guns, with the unwieldy protuberances we have mentioned at the sides, a steam apparatus of the total weight of 470 tons, a great black funnel, and volumes of smoke in due proportion; and withal, for the plan is amphibious, a complete sailing machinery—for emergencies of fair winds or accidents to machinery—including four rather low masts, rigged somewhat in schooner style, and able to add considerably on occasion to the boat's speed. It appears that this ship is much the largest, on the whole, ever built. The fore cabin is 46 feet long; an ample engine room is left in the centre; and this separates the former from a state cabin of 82 feet in length and 34 in extreme breadth, taken up, except in the centre, with berths (like the fore cabin) at the sides, including, above and below, and fore and aft, 128 sleeping places for one class of passengers, besides which there are 20 for servants. Of the very costly and elegant fittings up of this grand saloon we can add nothing to the plentiful details furnished by the daily papers; suffice it to say, that Mr. Parris has had charge of the decorations, which are in the style of Watteau and date of Louis XIV., and that no pains seem to have been spared to outdo the Liners, and "astonish the natives" on the other side of the sea. We should not forget that, affixed to the frame work of the engine is an index, by which the number of strokes performed by the machinery, and the rate of their performance, is shown with the greatest accuracy, and which, it is stated, without requiring to be again wound up, will mark as many strokes as suffice for the whole voyage to New York.

Finally, she must doubtless be pronounced as staunch a piece of British naval architecture as ever floated, as well as the most elegantly decorated of all. Her engines have been proved—the boat has been and will be thoroughly tried throughout—200 tons of cargo will be taken, if offered; and so the Great Western, hoisting at length the lion-flag, will commence her march on the mountain wave, with the motto, victory or death. She is expected to make her passage out, under average circumstances, in fifteen days, and the return voyage in twelve. Fair luck befall her!

But we are not yet done with the steamers. We promised to give a summary of all that is proposed by the various parties, and we have not yet named the greatest of all the lions by far—we mean the Victoria, now on the stocks, at Limehouse. This extraordinary ship is the project and property of the British and American Steam Navigation Company. Their plan, as first announced, was, to build a line, composed of two British and two American steam ships, of great size each, as sufficient to keep up a communication twice a month to and from New York; the reason for uniting the two classes, being, of course, that British ships, by treaty of commerce, are not permitted to take foreign goods to the United States—they must be shipped in American bottoms; while, on the other hand, American ships are not permitted to bring foreign goods to England except for exportation only. By the union of both, all descriptions of goods are secured. These four were expected to make as many passages to and fro as eight sailing packets would. More were to be added as required. The tonnage proposed was 1,200, and the horse power 300; and the ships were estimated to cost 40,000*l.* each. The annual expense of such a vessel was rated at 18,480*l.*, including fuel out and home for six voyages, or for 42,000 miles. This calculation, which we think worth preserving, is exclusive of the charges incident to freight. These, with the profit also on freight, are contingent. Set down this at 400 tons measurement goods, with certain prices, and 60, 80, and 100 passengers, of three different classes, and we have 4,600*l.* receipts on freight. The expenses on the same being rated at 2,520*l.*, the net freight out and home is made to amount to 3,880*l.*, or above 50 per cent per annum on prime cost; or 30 per cent with a net of 1,200*l.* and 800*l.* out and home. We subjoin, for reference, the following items of the annual expense of the floating establishment:—Commander, 300*l.*; first mate, 100*l.*; second mate, 80*l.*; third mate, 60*l.*; surgeon, 100*l.*; twenty-five seamen and apprentices, 600*l.*; ten firemen, at 60*s.*, 360*l.*; one engineer at 150*l.*; one at 100*l.*, and one at 80*l.*, 330*l.*; one carpenter, 50*l.*; oil, tallow, and tow for engines, and other small stores, 1,000*l.*

☞ ON A SUBJECT DEEPLY INTERESTING TO MANY.—Since the publication of my little private volume on Venereal Disease, &c. (designed originally for those who wished to have a private, as well as a speedy and convenient mode of cure,) it has been my lot to witness so many wretched examples of these diseases, arising chiefly from the various boasting nostrums which fill our daily papers, as to induce me to give a portion of time expressly to consultation on them. It is not, however, by any means agreeable to enter, myself, upon the advertising list—yet, the importance of the subject, together with the difficulty of making my practice known in any other way, has led me to this course. Perhaps there are no diseases which give a more intense degree of suffering to the mind, nor are there any which require a greater share of knowledge and experience, combined with strict integrity, in those who are consulted on them. And when it further be reflected on that venereal diseases, if not thoroughly eradicated from the constitution, do not confine themselves to those who first contract them, but extend to the virtuous and innocent, it must appear to every man of sense, that these complaints are worthy of the time and talent of the very best physicians. In asking, however, for so great a share of confidence on a subject of so deep an interest, it seems expedient that I should also give some statement of the ground on which I seek this confidence. For these reasons, though I beg to state, that in addition to being a graduate of Edinburgh, a member of the Royal College of Surgeons, London, as well as the author of the "Private Treatise," written expressly on diseases of this nature, I have also testimonial letters from the greatest surgeons in Europe to the most eminent in America, as Dr. Mott of New York, and Dr. Physick of Philadelphia, and these may be seen by any one who wishes it. I would therefore only add, that those who write by the post, or otherwise consult me, will receive the faithful attention of one of much experience and knowledge in this department of diseases.

A CARD—IMPORTANT TO THE BEAU MONDE.—The Vanilla Compound, or Persian Soap, continues to enjoy its high reputation as the only cosmetic that will remove eruptions of the face and freckles. It gives great relief to the face and hands where the skin is liable to chap, from exposure to the wind, which, from its healing properties is a great desideratum. The smooth, transparent appearance it gives to the complexion, must bespeak for it a great popularity among the ladies. As a soap for shaving it cannot be surpassed, producing in a few seconds a fine rich lather. The patronage it receives from the nobility and gentry of France and England has made it extensively used in Europe.
It may be had of H. C. Hart, corner of Broadway and Courtlandt st; J. H. Hart, corner of Chamber st and Broadway; Wm. B. Hoffman, 657 Broadway; and E. M. Guion, 127 Bowery, corner of Grand st. corner of Henry and Pike sts. and 441 Grand st.

HOYT'S HOTEL—NEW YORK—The public and strangers arriving, are respectfully informed that this extensive and highly eligibly located establishment is now permanently arranged on the European plan, and offers inducements on the score of economy, comfort and convenience, which, it is presumed, cannot be equalled by any hotel in the city. Strangers, particularly, will find it in every way desirable, as their meals can be obtained in the same style at any hour, and the charges made only for what is ordered or as they may prefer, at a charge of One Dollar and a Half per day. The lodging rooms are in the best condition, and the house having three fronts admits of the freest ventilation. Families can be accommodated either at the ladies' ordinary or in their private apartments, of which the house affords a large number of suits handsomely furnished. The bar is provided with the best of liquors and is under the superintendence of STEPHEN B. HOLT, who being well conversant with the French, Spanish and Italian languages, will be able to extend better facilities to gentlemen of those nations who may patronize the house. The dining department is conducted by ASA HOLT, where will be found every variety of the best which the market can furnish, with superior hot coffee and tea—to the preparing of which special attendance is given. The basement story is conducted by STEPHEN HOLT, Sen., where, upon his good old fashioned plan, he will be happy to serve his friends with the best of fare on his accustomed reasonable terms.

☞ A PRIVATE TREATISE, &c. ON VENEREAL DISEASES, GONORRHEA, GLEET, &c., written more especially for those who require a private, as well as an immediate and perfect cure of their complaints, but adapted also to the use of every individual. The Treatise, (which may be had alone if wished for,) is fitted in the lid of a little chest, containing every ingredient and medicine necessary for the cure. Having this little chest and book complete, there is no occasion whatever to make a second person acquainted with the subject, not even in long standing and doubtful cases. If it be preferred, however, the author may be consulted confidentially by post or otherwise, and the medicine sent to any distance.
It would be scarcely possible to express the satisfaction this little book affords to all who are acquainted wit it, for being known to give the plain and faithful treatment of a regular physician of many years experience, and one also who is honored with testimonial letters from the highest surgeons in Europe to the most eminent in America, as Dr. Mott of New York, and Dr. Physick of Philadelphia—its directions are followed with that confidence and regularity which ensure success. In this little volume, not only are the different kinds of the disease described with plainness, but the cure of those other and more distressing symptoms which arise from constitution, habits of life, age &c. is also given with great clearness, so that those whose health and spirits are almost broken down for want of proper treatment, are led at once to see their error.—To every man of sense it must be evident that nothing can be more unwise than to trust himself to any of those boasting nostrums which are daily advertised as certain cures in all those varying circumstances. Indeed, it is to those, chiefly, that we hear of so many persons continuing on from month to month uncured, and it should be also known that it is not only the anxiety of mind, and great expense incurred by these deceptions, but when a clap or gleet is suffered to remain so long, nothing is more common than a stricture as the consequence. Now, a stricture, if not removed by proper means, is the most serious thing that can possibly happen, and, which makes it worse, it frequently exists where neither the patient or the doctor once suspects it. Moreover, this is the stage of the disease in which so much ignorance and knavery is practised by advertising persons. There are these, for instance, who pretend to cure a gleet arising from this cause, with a box of pills, or a bottle of drops, when every surgeon knows that all the physic in the world would never cure a stricture. For these reasons, therefore, the author has been particularly anxious to make the cure of strictures plain and easy, and in this he has succeeded most completely. Many have consulted him on strictures who are perfectly astonished at the ease and quickness with which they are cured, having for years tried every other means in vain. Indeed, under the author's mode of treatment, nothing is more safe and easy than the cure of strictures.
The remaining chapters of this little volume are on the subject of venereal disease, properly so called, in which every symptom from its very first beginning down to its most neglected form, are stated with the utmost clearness. In all their stages the treatment will be seen to be exceedingly easy and effectual, so that, with the assistance of the little chest, any one may undertake his cure with perfect safety. In these chapters also, will be found some facts detailed upon the effect of old venereal taints on children. Many who are about to marry, or being married have no families, will find some deeply interesting explanations on this subject.
Price of the Chest and Book complete, $12.00. The Book alone, $1.00.

BEWARE, BEWARE OF IGNORANT PRETENDERS TO MEDICAL KNOWLEDGE.—DR. WILLIAM EVANS is grateful to the public for the high confidence which they have been pleased to repose in him, and in testimony of his gratitude, he begs leave to assure them that he has received more patients through a knot of advertising locusts than from the deviations of the infatuated from morality.
Dr. Evans' knowledge of medical and surgical practice has been derived from the best schools and hospitals in England and Scotland—he is not, therefore to be classed with men ignorant of these important sciences—men who, scarcely able to affix their sign manual, have brought over, "pro pudor!" half starved, and quarter educated aspirants for fame, to puff un
