ELECTIONS IN FRANCE. They Are Held on Sunday and Rarely Finished in One Day.

ELECTIONS IN FRANCE. In France elections are held on Sunday. Universal manhood suffrage is the rule.

ELECTIONS IN FRANCE. Every Frenchman of twenty-one years of age, on proof of six months' residence, is a legal voter at the elections to the chamber, saving only soldiers on active service and others disqualified for bankruptcy and criminal reasons.

ELECTIONS IN FRANCE. Because of the number of candidates the first day's polling in many districts is not final. Where no candidate receives an absolute majority, a second election is held.

ELECTIONS IN FRANCE. It often happens that from one third to one fourth of the elections for deputies are not finally decided until the second poll, when not infrequently one or more candidates in a district have withdrawn.

OUR BATTLESHIP MASTS. Perilous Perches For Range Finders Strapped to Their Tops.

OUR BATTLESHIP MASTS. A smudge of smoke on the horizon, then two skeleton towers of steel lattice-work just above the sky line.

OUR BATTLESHIP MASTS. A battleship! A United States battleship! Why? Because United States battleships are the only ones that have masts of latticed steel tubing—towers that look as if they were meant to train crimson rammer roses and a hundred or more feet high.

OUR BATTLESHIP MASTS. Fighting tops are obsolete in the United States navy. The men who occupy the masts at the top of the masts nowadays are unarmed. Their sole usefulness to the ship consists in finding the range for the gunners down below.
