

heated, and by means of pipes can be carried to great distances for heating purposes. The construction of the machine is such that it is easily adapted to every place where there is waste of power, as in mills, factories, public buildings and cars. Thus, to carry a machine with 36 square inches of friction plates—the ordinary size—one-half horse power only is required, while a machine with 225 square inches of friction surface will require only four-horse power, and will heat a room 60x200, or 126,000 cubic feet. In steam cars the machine is easily and cheaply adjusted to the axle, the power being taken directly from the wheels, so that in case of accident all danger from fire is eliminated. This machine has been in practical operation for some months, and it is claimed that with 36 cubic feet of friction surface a room of 10,000 cubic feet can be heated more uniformly and quicker than by the use of coal, wood or steam, and absolutely without expense save the wear of the friction plates and the pitance for extra coal under the boiler.
