He Giveth His Beloved Sleep.

He sees when their footsteps falter, when their hearts grow weak and faint;
He marks when their strength is failing, and listens to each complaint;
He bids them rest for a season, for the pathway has grown too steep,
And, folded in fair, green pastures,
He giveth His loved ones sleep.

Like weary and worn-out children that sigh for the daylight's close,
He knows that they oft are longing for home and the sweet repose;
So he calls them in from their labors, ere the shadows round them crvep,
And silently watching o'er them,
He giveth His loved ones sleep.

He giveth it, oh, so gently! as a mother will hush to rest
The babe that she softly pillows so tenderly on her breast,
Forgotten are now the trials and sorrows that made them weep,
For with many a soothing promise
He giveth His loved ones sleep.

He giveth it! Friends the dearest can never this boon bestow;
But he touches the drooping eyelids, and placid the features grow!
Their foes may gather about them, and storms may round them sweep,
But, guarding them safe from danger,
He giveth His loved ones sleep.

All dread of the distant future, all fears that oppress to-day
Like toils that clear in the sunlight, have noiselessly passed away;
No call or clamor can rouse them from slumbers so pure and deep,
For only His voice can reach them
Who giveth His loved ones sleep.

Weep not that their toils are over; weep not that their race is run;
God grant we may rest as calmly, when our work, like theirs, is done.
Till then we would yield with gladness our treasures to Him to keep,
And rejoice in the sweet assurance—
He giveth His loved ones sleep.

Descent of the Punchbowl.

[Written for the Saturday Press.]

'Twas ten o'clock one pleasant night,
And the silv'ry moon shed forth its light,
When we left the Punchbowl's rocky brow
To reach its base somewhere, somehow,
And with ears we chose the somewhat trail,
As we supposed;—but to our tale:
No sooner had we left the top
Than downward we began to drop—
To drop and slide
And slip and glide;
To bound and leap
Like mountain sheep
Over rocky points,
With shaking joints.
So swiftly we went
Down the steep descent
That to stop we wouldn't,
And in fact we couldn't,
No time for aching limbs to rest
As on our downward way we prest.
Puffing, blowing,—and no wonder;
On we boomed like rolling thunder.
No talking,
Some walking,
No funning,
Much running;
Now thumping,
Now bumping,
Against the great rocks,
With the awfullest knocks,
And over the stones—
Endangering our bones—
Now leaping, now hopping,
With no thought of stopping,
Still downward we're plunging,
Right onward we're lunging,
Now slipping, and now sliding,
On our coat-tails now riding,
Now o'er a ledge jumping,
Then next ourselves dumping
Right out in the dirt.
We sometimes are hurt
And at other times not.
Of a sudden we squat
On a whapping big rock
With a terrible shock
That would certainly knock
All the wind and the talk
From a man with more brains
And less suffering pains.
Thus downward we go
In a long, straggling row,
And with many a slip, and with many a roll,
From the edge to the base of the rugged Punchbowl,
Till exhausted we drop
At the bottom and "stop,—
Short, never to go again."

Contrasts.

Every rag stuck into a window to keep out the cold from the drunkard's home denotes a contribution toward buying new suits for the rumseller and his family. The more elegance and ease in the rumseller's family, the more poverty, degradation and despair in the families of those who patronize him. The corner grog shop, with large plate-glass windows and marble floors, is paid for by the tenants of other landlords who refuse to let their buildings for such purposes. The more plate-glass and marble slabs there are in the rum shop, the more old hats and soiled garments must be stuck in the window of their patrons to keep out the cold air. The more silk flounces upon the dress of the rumseller's wife, the cheaper the calico upon the wife and children of his patrons.

The more spacious the parlor and brighter the fire of the rumsellers, the more scantily furnished and colder are the abodes of those who patronize him. While the rumseller drives his $1,000 span, his customers cannot even afford a five cent horse-car. From the bung hole of every barrel of liquid damnation that is sold by the dramsellers there flows a constant stream of drunkards, criminals, paupers, tramps, lunatics, and imbeciles to fill poor houses, fashions of correction, jails and prisons; while blasted hopes, ruined homes, and paupers' graves are the relics of the trade. Every dollar that the owner of the rum shop and his rum-selling tenant put into their pockets, comes out of the pockets of the poor men, and is a dead loss as far as the public good is concerned. Worse than that, the more rum sold the more burdens there are imposed upon the honest citizens and taxpayers. The richer the landlord and his rum-selling tenants grow, the poorer become the landlord who lets his buildings for tenements and legitimate business. It is an undisputed fact that the laboring man who has a family cannot indulge in liquor drinking and pay his landlord and grocer.

Water.

[Communicated.]

The Germans are the great beer drinkers, the English are the great ale and porter drinkers, the Latin races are the great wine makers and wine drinkers. Russia produces the heaviest drinkers of raw brandy and proof spirits, while the United States of America are noted for mixed drinks.

Water is the great drink of the majority of the human race. Water with a bit of tea, of coffee, of lemon, of sugar, of something hot or cold in it for the civilized; but for the great, common plain people, the majority of the population of the world, simple water is the only daily drink.

What would mankind do without water? Did you ever thank God for daily water?

Drinking ardent spirits is a vice of civilization, not of barbarism; attendant on our highest modern culture, not an indispensible adjunct of heathenism. Why cannot this stigma be removed?

Mixed drink is a luxury, water a necessity. If the drinking water of the world were paid for at the rate of one cent per individual, it would cost $14,239,170 every day.

If only one drop were sought to cool each tongue, it would take not less than 569 hogsheads of 63 gallons each, a drop-moisten the tongues of the world.

Calling a quart of water a fair allowance for one person, the amount consumed every day by the population of the world is more than 5,650,464 hogsheads of 63 gallons each. This supply never fails to be delivered without money and without price on God's part. Among the miracles of nature the creation and maintenance of the water supply of the earth is not the least. Temperance in the West.

One of the most notable occurrences of the last half decade, and one which must attract strongly the regard and interest of every student of political and social science, is the manner in which the temperance issue has forced itself into prominence in the West. In Kansas it has laid hold on a party and the State. It is to-day the most prominent and forceful issue in Nebraska legislation, and will soon become the dominant factor in Iowa politics. In this latter State, especially, is their course to wonder at the sudden and irresistible force with which this temperance sentiment has laid hold upon State politics. The leading politicians of Iowa fully appreciate the imminence and importance of this issue, which will soon squarely confront them; and the newspapers of the State are already deep in its discussion.

Something of the same kind might be said of the South, in some parts of which the sensible people are awake to the importance of having their rights secured, in part at least, by law. It is high time that every State in the Union was employing all its power, moral and legal, religious and civil, to stay the sale of intoxicating liquors. The New York Herald says editorially: "The temperance question, in whatever light regarded, is one of the most interesting and important of the many problems of the day. During the last eight or ten days our columns have teemed with interviews, addresses and correspondence on the subject."

If such testimony comes from the secular press, what should be the action of the religious press, the pulpit, the church, and society at large? There is no question which more deeply concerns the temporal and religious interests of this country.—New York Observer.

Discoveries in Ancient Mexico.

M. Lesire Charney, who recently returned from the Franco-Lorillard expedition in exploring in Mexico and Central America, has brought away photographs and paper impressions of inscriptions and bas-reliefs which he declares he would not take thirty thousand dollars for. Unfavorable weather and the desertion of the Mexican Indians he had employed, forced his return much sooner than he originally intended, but he proposes to return to Mexico next October. He describes a ruined Toltec city near Tabasco, on the Mexican Gulf coast. He believes it was founded between 1150 and 1130, and was in a perfect state of preservation when Cortez invaded Mexico. The hills were covered with temples, pyramids and palaces. The largest of the pyramids is 500 feet in height, and a second is fully 300. Nature has had more to do with these monuments than art, as the builders had merely shaped the hillocks into pyramidal form, and afterward faced them with stone; and steps were also cut in the sides, paved with a mixture of cement and pebbles. He learned that in ancient Spanish records statements were to be found that this city was not destroyed until after Vera Cruz was laid out. At Palenque he procured many valuable impressions and tracings, and in the way of discovery located the ancient cities of Tula, Niotihuicau and Comalcalco. In the course of his travels he also came across two hitherto unknown cemeteries, and procured much interesting and valuable data from the inscriptions there discovered. A large number of photographs of mural designs, upward of a hundred paper pressings of bas-reliefs, and many impressions of the hieroglyphics on the mouldering temples, palaces and monuments, were also secured.

The "Corwin" and her Arctic Cruise.

The Secretary of the Treasury has transmitted the orders which are to govern the action of Captain Hooper on the Thomas Corwin, in his approaching cruise to the Arctic, to San Francisco. The Corwin is to sail within a few days. The instructions given her able and gallant commander are, like those under which he cruised last summer, most liberal and elastic. Nominally the Corwin goes to the Arctic to prevent frauds on the revenue; practically she goes to discover the whereabouts of the Jeannette, and, if possible, of the Mount Wollaston and the Vigilant, to rescue their crews and to bring them home again. It is with this view that Secretary Windom confers upon the commander such discretionary and personal power. It is for this that the Corwin has been strengthened and improved within and without and furnished with double supplies of everything usually found in ships' stores. She is in perfect condition, and is, in fact, much better fitted to battle with the ice than the costly Rodgers (nee the Mary and Helen). The Corwin's crew are picked men, and most of them have served on similar expeditions. Her commander, Charles L. Hooper, a young, experienced and skilled mariner, possesses the confidence of the Treasury Department to an unlimited extent. He achieved more in that icy region last summer than any predecessor. He is instructed this year to sail for Behring Straits, and will stop on the way at the stations on coast and islands, and thence into the Arctic. He is to use every means in his power to find the missing vessels, and in this attempt is to be guided only by his own judgment. It is believed that he will find them, if they are to be found. The race between the Corwin and the Rodgers on this errand of mercy will be an exciting one. Captain Hooper believes the whalers will never be seen again.
