CLEVER CUB CURES CRANKY CHAP CULLING CURIOUS COLLOCATION

How the Young Reporter Foiled the City Editor's Attempt to Get His Goat

BY THE CUB REPORTER.

The City Editor threw the last of a huge bunch of copy into the box with a sigh, and reached for his pipe. Settling himself back in his chair he fired up the Jimmy and picked up the joke section of an exchange. As he read along here and there in the paper something caught his eye, which caused him to snuffle—a thing a City Editor seldom does. He turned to the Sport Scribe, who was busy looking up a tennis game from the morning sheet.

"Ignatz," he said, "these here alliterations always did corral my nanny."

"What's an alliteration?" asked the Sport Scribe.

"Well, I'll tell you," answered the C. E. "An alliteration is a sentence where all the words commence with the same letter. I happened to run across a few in this sheet here. Here's a couple, 'Four fat Frenchmen fastly fanning five fainting flies,' and 'Susan sat sewing Sam's Sunday shirts.' Pretty good, eh?"

"Oh yes," said the Sport Scribe. "I've heard of 'em. How's this one: 'Two tired tramps traveling together?'"

"Haw! Haw!" Shouted the C. E. "You're pretty clever yourself."

He read on for a few moments and suddenly sat up with a start.

"Gosh!" he exclaimed.

"Smatter?" inquired the Sport Scribe, looking up.

"I've got it at last!" cried the Chief. "I've found a way at last to hand it to the Cub."

"How you goin' to do it?" inquired the S. S.

"I'll work it tomorrow morning," answered the City Editor. "After he has finished his re-write, he will come to me and ask me if I have anything special for him."

"And what'll you say?" interrupted the S. S.

"I'll tell him to write me one of them alliterations," resumed the City Editor. "And I'll further impress upon his mind that if he doesn't do it I'll can him."

"Good idea," said the S. Scribe.

The next morning the Cub Reporter finished his re-write and sauntered over to the City Editor's desk.

"Got anything special for me this morning, Chief?" he asked.

The C. E. looked over in the direction of the Sport Scribe and winked, and then faced the Cub.

"Willie," he said, "if you value your little old job here, you will get busy at once and write me an alliteration."

"A who?" asked the Cub.

"An alliteration," repeated the City Editor. "Don't you know what an alliteration is?"

"Nope; that's where I have to hand it to you," answered the Cub. "They don't serve it where I board."

"An alliteration, my son, is not an edible," explained the C. E. "It is a sentence in which all the words commence with the same letter. For example, 'Little Willie Likes Leoric's Get me?'"

"Oh, sure!" said the Cub. "I have you, Stephen. For instance: 'Ehe sits by the seaside silling seashells; the shells she sell are scallops, I'm sure. How's that?'"

"Well," said the C. E. "That's not exactly an alliteration. Every word, not every other word, must commence with the same letter. Do you think you can do it?"

"I guess I'll have to," said the Cub. "You'll do it or get canned!" exclaimed the City Editor.

"What'll I write about?" asked the Cub.

The C. E. thought a long time before he finally answered.

"I'll tell you," he said. "Write about Winnie and Willie!"

"Winnie and Willie!" exclaimed the Cub. "That's a crummy subject. Never mind what you think," said the C. E. "Get busy. And, say, I want at least ten words on that."

The Cub went over to his typewriter and started in, and every little while the C. E. would catch the sound of a faint tap-tap. He looked over at the Sport Scribe.

"I guess the Cub will have a hot-box on his thumbs if he doesn't watch out," he said in an undertone.

A half hour passed, and at the end of that time the Cub arose and walked over to where the C. E. was sitting, and to the great surprise of that individual, handed him a page and a half of typewritten material.

The City Editor took the copy and started in to read it. It went like this:

"Washing Winnie, waiting wearily, wondering why wayward Willie was erred. Wee, wan, wistful was Winnie; watchful, wise, wily was Willie."

"Winnie," whispered Willie; "why wait whilst whistling winds woefully whine. We will wander whither we will, won't we? We will wander where wondrous waterfalls waltz Westward; where wenny woodpeckers work; where whimsical waterways wade; where whiskered warriors war; where wrathful women wrangle; where whispering wrens warble; where wonderful wallabies—"

But the City Editor had fainted.

POPULAR VOTE OF PAST ELECTIONS TABLES FOR REFERENCE IN FUTURE

"Popular Vote for Presidential Elections by Principal Political Parties, 1828-1908," is the title of a series of tables, especially interesting at the present moment, published in the Statistical Abstract of the United States, issued by the Division of Statistics of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Department of Commerce and Labor. These tables, occupying several pages of the abstract, present the official record of the vote cast in each presidential election as far back as official records are available. Congress passed, in 1867, an act providing that state officials should thereafter file with the secretary of state certified statements of the vote cast in their respective states for electors of each party in the presidential elections, and the records thus filed with the department of state were utilized in the compilation of the tables above referred to, thus making them the first and perhaps only official publication of the vote cast in presidential elections by states and parties in each election since the enactment of the law providing for an official record by the national government of the vote cast.

A study of these tables, covering a full 80-year period, 1828 to 1908, presents many facts especially interesting at this moment. The tables which follow show (1) the total vote cast in the United States and total for the Democrat and Republican parties, respectively, in the presidential elections from 1828 to 1908, and (2) the total vote cast in each state in 1908 and the number for the Democrat and Republican electors, respectively.

HUMAN OSTRICH FULL OF ASSORTED HARDWARE

PITTSFIELD, Mass., Nov. 2.—Luke Parsons, the "human ostrich," was operated on today in a Pittsfield hospital, and the surgeons removed 132 nails, two keys, a buttonhook and a partly-digested three-inch iron spike from his stomach and intestines. A nail had punctured the abdomen and caused peritonitis.

Parsons, who is forty years old, has had a craving for metal since he accidentally swallowed some shingle nails ten years ago. Jackknives, spikes and can openers were regarded by him as special delicacies. Last week he had symptoms of indigestion. He had had attacks before, but always found a remedy by eating pieces of tin; a button hook or some keys. When he applied to the hospital for treatment he said his digestion was a little out of order.

The surgeons are doubtful of his recovery.

Crisp Fried Foods

Cannot be made without great heat. Butter smokes at too low a temperature, lard a little higher, but the new vegetable oil cooking compound, will not smoke at 455 F. Crisco gets so hot that it cooks the outside of the food at once, and the grease cannot soak in. This is the secret of the deliciously crisp food it makes.

CRISCO

Your Grocer Sells Crisco

Beach voters have adopted what is said to be the most drastic prohibitory amendment in California. The vote was 3553 for and 1512 against. By far the greater number of ballots in favor of the amendment were cast by women.

Under the new amendment, which goes into effect January 1st next, it will be unlawful to possess, sell, give away, distribute or in any manner whatsoever handle intoxicating liquors except it be by physicians or druggists selling by physician's prescription.

The law states that any person taking a drink is equally guilty with the dispenser thereof, and shall be subject to a fine of $500.

One exception allows a householder to have liquor in his own home for his own use, or entertainment of friends, provided he does not sell it; but the next provision prohibits any carrier from bringing liquor into the city.

Hotels, restaurants, cafes, lodges, etc., are absolutely prohibited from selling or having liquor on their premises.

The new law gives officers the right of search without warrant, and confiscation of property seized without trial.

Both sides seemed highly elated today that the amendment had carried. Opponents of the law stated that it was certain to be declared unconstitutional, while proponents were equally sanguine that its every provision would be upheld.

SOMETHING FOR MOTHERS.

This is the season of the year when mothers feel very much concerned over the frequent colds contracted by their children, and have abundant reason for it, as every cold weakens the lungs, lowers the vitality and paves the way for the more serious diseases that so often follow. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is famous for its cures, and is pleasant and safe to take. For sale by all dealers. Benson, Smith & Co., Ltd., agents for Hawaii.
