RANCH MANAGER LAYS DISCHARGE TO DR. NORGAARD

Leonard Parish Says Veterinarian Made Trouble Over Anthrax Outbreak

Following what he declares was an assertion by Dr. Victor A. Norgaard, territorial veterinarian, that his services should not be retained, Leonard Parish has resigned as manager of the Princeville plantation, Kauai.

Parish asserts that the entire trouble grew out of a visit Dr. Norgaard made to Kauai to investigate the anthrax outbreak. He says that when several cases of the disease were discovered on the plantation, he immediately wrote to Norgaard asking him to come to Kauai immediately.

"The trouble first arose when Norgaard, answering my letter, upbraided me for not witnessing him," says Parish, "in spite of the fact that he must have known that the inter-island wireless service was not working at that time."

When Parish took charge of the plantation on March 22, 21 head of cattle had died from anthrax, he says: "I immediately exercised every precaution against a spread, using disinfectant and having all carcasses immediately buried," says Parish. "I also summoned the territorial veterinarian stationed on Kauai."

Parish says he had his first argument with Norgaard when he found that Veterinarian A. R. Glazier had purchased a quantity of disinfectant at a Honolulu drug store and charged it to the plantation.

"I objected to this," Parish says, "and told Norgaard that if Glazier was making purchases and charging them to the plantation, I should be informed of it."

On March 22 Parish says he was invited to make a trip to Eleale with some friends. Before he went, he continues, he had instructed a gang of laborers to go to work burning carcasses. This was on a Sunday. On the following Monday, he says, Rev. Hans Isenberg, who owns a two-thirds interest in the plantation, met him on the road and told him he would have to give up his position.

"Norgaard says you'll have to go, are the words he used in telling me about it," says Parish.

He adds that Isenberg had mentioned his going to Eleale and that Norgaard had been of the opinion that he should have stayed at the plantation and personally supervised the burning of the carcasses and other work.

"Naturally I thought that since Norgaard was there he had taken complete charge and that the affair was out of my hands," says Parish. "After what Isenberg told me, there was nothing left for me to do but to quit."

Asked today if he thought the anthrax outbreak on Kauai was due to bone meal shipped there from Australia, Parish said he is not certain. He said the plantation had used bone meal to mix with salt for the cattle licks.

"I do not know whether Norgaard analyzed a sample of the bone meal," he continued, "and I am not certain where the last shipment of bone meal came from. We laid the outbreak to the cold and heavy rains, and I had the cattle moved down, which lessened the number of deaths to some extent."

"Glazier had diagnosed the disease as something entirely different until Jay Kuhns, a former interne at a local hospital, made a microscopic examination of some blood, and then we all knew that it was anthrax."

Parish says the outbreak of anthrax in Honolulu was decidedly suspicious because of the suddenness with which it occurred. The outbreak on Kauai, he says, came slowly, with only a few deaths at first.

TRAVEL CHARGES FORCE CHURCH TO CUT PROGRAM

The high cost of living which has struck a hard blow at many persons and organizations in the territory, has found a brand new target. This time it is the Hawaiian Evangelical Association.

Because of the high price of foodstuffs, as well as transportation, the 95th annual meeting of the association in Honolulu from June 26 to June 29 is going to be unusually small, and some of the interesting features which have made former conventions auspicious are to be discontinued this year.

In the first place the session will last four instead of seven days. Because the transportation charges to Honolulu from the other islands will be reduced only one-fourth instead of one-half, only about 150 persons are expected to attend instead of the customary 300 or 400.

The Christian Endeavor and Sunday School annual meetings, which have always been held in conjunction with the big convention, will be dispensed with this year, and the annual inter-island song contest, always an enthusiastic climax to the session, will not be held. The usual big luau to the delegates will be lacking and even the program will be cut down materially.

The business to be conducted will be only that pertaining to the corporation or board. The usual reports of the church will not be presented or considered. On the first afternoon the Hawaii and Maui associations will meet, and in the evening the Anti-Saloon League will hold its annual meeting in Kawaiahaeo church.

A portion of the time will be devoted to inspirational addresses and a discussion of live topics pertaining to the welfare of the churches. Some of these topics follow:

"The Christian in the Home," Rev. E. G. da Silva; "The Christian in Business," Rev. George E. Lake; "The Christian in the Church," Rev. N. C. Schenck; "The Christian in the Community," Rev. F. S. Scudder.

One of the main subjects will be "The Relation of the Church to Social Welfare." This will be discussed on two mornings by Rev. J. M. Lydeate, Rev. D. W. K. White, Rev. W. B. Coale, Rev. S. L. Desha and Rev. George Laughton.

Other topics to be discussed during the meeting are "The Church's Contribution to Education," Revs. J. P. Erdman, T. Okumura and A. S. Baker; "The Church's Contribution to the Spiritual Life of the Community," Rev. William Kamau, Rev. H. P. Judd and Rev. G. L. Kopa; "Ministerial Education," Revs. E. E. Pleasant, W. M. Kalaiwaa and James Davis; Rev. Akaiho Akana will conduct a meeting to discuss the topic, "The Church and the Young People."

'WINE BUMS' IN LIMELIGHT; GET SOLDIERS BOOZE

"Blind Pigs," too, Flourishing Since Liquor Sales to Army Men Were Tabued

To adequately enforce the law prohibiting the selling of liquor to military men in uniform, it would be necessary to have two men stationed at the door of every saloon in the city," said U. S. Marshal J. J. Smiddy today, speaking of the activity of the "wine bums" who are believed to be negotiating extensive liquor sales to men in khaki.

As regards the saloons themselves, Marshal Smiddy believes they are adhering strictly to the law, but it is the go-betweens, he says, who are going to make all the trouble.

"I have information," he continued, "that blind pigs are now ordering booze in large quantities either from saloons or wholesale houses. When these places find that the saloons will not deliver, they engage chauffeurs to get it for them. I am also informed that the saloons are selling considerable booze to civilians who, in the past, have never had money enough to buy more than one or two drinks."

Since the enforcement of the new federal law, says the marshal, the "wine bums" have become suddenly important.

"They are appearing on the streets in clean clothes, shirts and collars, and some of them are even boasting of their status," he declares. "They are even rattling loose change in pockets that were practically empty before."

On Saturday evening Marshal Smiddy watched for an hour or more the entrance of a local rooming house situated near army headquarters.

"I have good reason to believe," he says, "that a large number of soldiers went into the rooms there, changed into civilian clothes and then went out and bought drinks or else brought booze back with them. Soldiers were rolling in and out of the place all the while I was there and the air around the place was thick with boisterous laughing and talking."

Smiddy says he made no arrests for the reason that what violations there were were purely matters for army headquarters to attend to. He adds that, under the circumstances, he had no authority to make any arrests.

P. Rodrigues, who, with another man, was arrested recently on a charge of selling liquor to soldiers, was to have a preliminary hearing this afternoon before U. S. Commissioner George S. Curry.

WORK ON NEW KALIHI PHONE STATION STARTS

Construction of the handsome new Mutual Telephone Company's Kalihi sub-station building has started and plans similar to those of the Kaimuki sub-station now in operation have been announced by Manager F. G. Hummel. The building will be a two-story, white, concrete, fire-proof structure and will stand on Kalihi road, about 300 feet mauka of King street. It will cost about $15,000 and there will be 8000 switches with allowances made for more. When the sub-station is connected with the city system the service will be just the same as that now enjoyed by Kaimuki with an automatic relay.
