The Largest Cracker Ever Made

IT was designed and manufactured expressly for a dinner party given last winter by Barton O. Walden, a bachelor of the smart set, for his friends. The cracker had concealed within it prizes and a costume for every one present, which were pulled out by means of mysterious strings of ribbon. The cracker, as will be seen, was longer than the average person and fully as large around.

Dress of Applique Net

THIS dainty gown is made of gauze net appliqued with gray ornamentations and made up over rose satin. The upper part of the waist is made over a white lining, giving a high-girdle effect.

THE BOY AND THE FARM

In a recent speech Colonel Roosevelt, advising against urban residence when it is possible to get out into the open, and it is not unlike that this will revive a discussion that appears at intervals a discussion that has not heretofore had any very great effect upon the country bred youth. One reason for this is that well-meaning people who urge young men to "stick to the farm" know little or nothing about farm life. They are themselves city bred, and their idea of rural districts is that of the annual vacationist who lies in a hammock or golfs in the abandoned corn field. City men who

We Are Learning How to Take Care Of Ourselves

THE REST ROOM NOW TO BE FOUND BOTH IN THE TOWN AND THE COUNTRY IS A STEP IN THE RIGHT DIRECTION.

AS a nation we are at last learning how to rest. Our reputation among foreign nations has long been that of the most nervous nation on earth. We have hustled and pushed and tried to do six things in the time allotted for one until we have been forced to come to our senses at last. Nervous prostration was for a long time one of the commonest complaints of the American woman, but doctors report a gradual but marked decrease of the ailment. This is because our women are learning to take care of themselves, to accustom them to a certain amount each day, to be down when tired and to eat only well chosen and properly cooked food.

It is not only the woman of fashion who needs the right kind of treatment who are reared in the country are generally silent. They know something of the grind, and that it is, or was in their day, a hard one. Whatever tendency there may be now to ameliorate conditions, the status of "little Rube" a generation ago was not a happy one.

His parents were fond of him and in their way indulgent, but public opinion, neighborhood criticism, gave him little time for diversion. He was expected to work from "sun-up to sundown," and if he failed to do so he was looked upon as lazy and profligate of his time. If his parents eased his lot by sending him ahead at a "late" hour, say 6 o'clock, and by permitting him to knock off after he had toiled until "early" in the afternoon, say 5 o'clock, they themselves were objects of suspicion, were tabulated as shiftless and lacking in character.

Industry is a good thing at all times, but farming communities override it. They are more oppressive in their attitudes toward child labor than any factory owner of the South, the single redeeming feature being that "they with the hoe" has abundance of fresh air; so much of it in fact that it makes him tired. There is not a mechanic in any city of the Galun that would or even could, in his day and age, accustom himself to the long hours accepted as a matter of course in rural parts.

One way to keep the boy on the farm would be to recognize that he is something more than an asset, that he is at least as good as a dray-horse, which labors not more than eight or ten hours a day in the city.

for her nerves, but the farmer's wife is equally worn out, and many a hard worker might have added years to her life if she had known how to relax and spare herself.

Among the factors that have brought about the marked improvement in women's health and powers of endurance must be mentioned the rest room. This is a spot in the busy shopping district where a woman may sit down and read in peace for half an hour or so or merely wait for her friends out of the crush and turmoil.

In the rural districts it is a room in the neighboring village where the mother does her shopping. There she may wait for her husband after she has made her purchases. There she may leave her children safely while she makes her own purchases. In the old times she would have been forced to wait in the wagon or, worse still, in the sun on the corner of the street. Comfortable wicker chairs, a few books and pictures and even an occasional piano add coziness to these rest rooms. The residents contribute the money for them in the way of gifts and entertainments for raising funds.

In one town of 1,700 inhabitants—Shepherdstown, W. Va.—the women have a fine rest room called Sunbeam hall, where there is a matron to take care of the little ones left during shopping hours in her charge.

POGUES ENTERTAIN AT POLITICAL LUAU

(Special Bulletin Correspondence.)
WAILUKU, Maui, Nov. 26.—Supervisor and Mrs. W. F. Pogue gave a luau at their home at Kailua last Monday afternoon in honor of the Republican recent victory. Supervisor and Mrs. Wm. Henning, and Hon. and Mrs. Ed. Waiahole, from Lahaina, and Supervisor-elect Chas. Lake and Sheriff Clement Crowell from Wailuku, were among those present at the luau which was considered a wonderful achievement in its line, and the host and hostess are both adepts in the art. On the following day Supervisors Pogue, Lake and Henning, accompanied by Sheriff Crowell made a tour of inspection of East Maui. The party was joined by Supervisor Hala at Hana who displayed with pride the wonderful road work in his district that gave claim was done at the expense of Wailuku and Lahaina roads. But the East Maui stationman only smiled and comforted his associates with the assurance that the other districts will now have their turn at the government coffers for the next two years. There is a white wagon used in the Kahikuni region now while heretofore nothing but a goat trail existed. Dr. J. H. Raymond and his son Harvey and Mr. Chas. Lucas are in the Kahikuni district now to see for themselves the wonders in road building during the present administration.
