All Run Down

When your vitality is low, you are miserable all the time. Your nerves are weak and your appetite is poor. You have no ambition, and you are languid and depressed all the time.

What you need is a good strong tonic described by Mrs. H. Austin, of Wellington, New Zealand. She sends her photograph and says: "I was so weak and tired all the time that I could not sleep at night. Or, if I did sleep, I was so tired in the morning as when I went to bed. I was all run down. I then tried Ayer's Sarsaparilla. After taking two bottles I found myself greatly improved, and soon I was completely restored to health. I think it is a great family medicine."

AYER'S Sarsaparilla

There are many imitations "Sarsaparilla." Be sure you get Ayer's.

You will improve faster by using Ayer's Pills with the Sarsaparilla. Take just enough each night to have one good, free movement of the bowels the day following.

SOUTH POLE HUNTER.

Talks of His Sledge Trip Over Ice Floes in South Seas.

"When we were within two hundred miles of the South Pole we were compelled to turn back and return to our ship, the Discovery," said Lieutenant Shackleton, R. N., yesterday as he stood on the hurricane deck of the Ventura, talking to an Advertiser reporter.

The officer, a splendid, ruddy-faced Britisher, made his statement mildly, without emphasis, and much as if he had said he had merely taken a trip to Diamond Head.

The officer was one of three who volunteered to take a sledge journey from the Discovery, four hundred and fifty miles from the South Pole, and endeavor to get as close to the mysterious center of the Antarctic region as possible. The hardships of that journey of ninety-four days were of a nature which the lieutenant, who is only twenty-eight years of age, desires to forget. It was because of these hardships that he was brought to Australia on the relief ship Morning to undergo medical treatment. As he stood on the deck of the Ventura yesterday he seemed not to bear a trace of the terrible journey. He said he was in splendid health, and that he was on his way to London to report officially on the voyage to the Admiralty.

Lieutenant Shackleton gave the story of the voyage only after persistent questioning. The Discovery, which was built at Dundee, is probably the finest ship ever constructed for arctic exploration. On the southern voyage she carried three year's supply of food. She is a bark-rigged vessel, and measures 172 feet in length. Her walls, of solid oak, are between eight and nine inches thick forward. The bow is covered with steel plate while the sheer of the bow is designed with special reference to an encounter with the pack. The vessel has auxiliary engines, and is good for eight knots under steam alone. She is provided with an asbestos lining an inch and a half thick, and she carries an awning of heavy felt to be stretched over her entire deck when in winter quarters. There is a room on her deck which was used in the far south for magnetic observations, and this was shielded from the influence of steel and iron for a distance of thirty feet by the use of brass. Twenty dogs, carefully selected in Russia, were taken along, but none of them survived the hardships of the sledge journey in which Lieutenant Shackleton participated.

The Discovery was commanded by Captain R. F. Scott, a torpedo lieutenant in the Naval Service. Lieutenant Shackleton was assigned to the vessel as physicist and astronomer. The instructions to Captain Scott were to explore the ice barrier of Ross, and to look for the land which he believed existed east of it. This barrier lies east of the immense recess in the coast of the Antarctic continent, south of New Zealand. The recess itself was invaded by Ross, who found at its southern extremity two volcanoes, which he named Erebus and Terror.

On January 30 of this year the Discovery was within 450 miles of the South Pole, and it was then decided that a sledge expedition should be sent forward. Captain Scott, Lieutenant Shackleton and another officer formed the party for this purpose, and the Russian dogs were used. They traveled over the ice and eventually came to a chain of mountains, a ridge running in the direction of the pole, which they followed. These mountains were in the neighborhood of 15,000 feet in height. For about twenty-five days the party traveled, when the dogs began to give out. The extreme cold froze some of them, and by the time the party was within 240 miles of the pole the last dog had sickened and died.

The three men then took the ropes and hauled their sledge. They met with hardships continually, and then began to show signs of sickness themselves. They dragged themselves on until the Captain became exhausted. All three were attacked by scurvy. When within 200 miles of the goal they came at last to a stop and there decided to return to the ship.

The scurvy attacked them fiercely and the disease had made such inroads that it seemed at times as if it would win the victory, but all three were men of great endurance, and ninety-four days from the time they set out on the perilous journey, they were back on the ship. Lieutenant Shackleton was in a bad condition, and when the relief ship came he was placed on board at once.

AN OFFICIAL'S ADVENTURE.

Or How an Old Custom is Enforced at Puuwaawaa Hill.

Guy Gere is a man of nerve. He has learned the limit of his nerve, however, and has displayed that rare quality of knowing how to surrender gracefully when confronted by a superior force.

Mr. Gere accompanied by E. E. Richards, made a tour of the Island last week, and in the course of their travels called at Eben Low's ranch, as all wise travelers do.

From time immemorial, custom has enforced one hard and fast rule upon all who put their feet under the mahogany at Puuwaawaa. Starched collars are tabu. Laundered neck gear must be left at the outer gate, or be hidden in boot tops with the cleverness of a customs evading globe trotter. Otherwise the paraphernalia will be claimed as a trophy to be nailed on the wall and labelled, alongside numerous other linen and paper collars that have been torn from necks of distinguished visitors.

The walls of the lavatory at Puuwaawaa are decorated with these linen collars. The collection is a motley one. One or two have done time, encircling the graceful neck and clasping the adam's apple of Gov. S. B. Dole. Others have absorbed the perspiration of foolhardy Honolulu lawyers. A few immaculate pieces of linen came from the necks of foolish tourists.

Now, there is one more. It came originally from some fashionable haberdashy. It is impaled by a rusty nail and has a greasy dusty streak down the center. It is a memento of the visit of Engineer Guy Gere. It is also a tribute to his nerve.

Mr. Gere had heard of the custom before he reached the ranch. He doubted the veracity of his informant and rode boldly to the house, accompanied by Richards, who always wears a collarless negligee. Gere was permitted to perform his ablutions. These over he was asked to appear on the front lanai, where a council was sitting in state.

Puuwaawaa Bill was the first to speak. He referred to the well known custom and expressed regret that one so young and fair had been so foolish as to forget it, or worse, ignore it. "You are welcome here, Mr. Gere; we are glad to see you. But that collar of yours is doomed. I have ten strong men who await my bidding to rend it from your graceful neck. Think it over," said Puuwaawaa, "and use your best discretion."

Gere was rattled, but he regained his equanimity and sent a searching glance around the company. He saw "no quarter" in every eye. He remembered the cane rush at college and the hazing scrape, then with masterful dignity and good nature took off his collar and handed it to the boss of "Puuwaawaa Hill."

When it was nailed in its place, Gere dryly remarked that the dirty side should have been turned to the wall.

Paris, May 19.—Religious disturbances occur daily and monks are being fined in the courts.

COSUMPTION which is the most dangerous and fatal disease, has as its first indication a persistent cough, and if properly treated as soon as this cough appears is easily cured. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy has proven wonderfully successful, and gained its wide reputation and extensive sale by its success in curing the diseases which cause coughing. It always cures and cures quickly. The Hilo Drug Store sells it.
