A Hit Below the Belt.

The Enterprise thus libels one of Reno's clothing merchants: "One of the proprietors of a clothing store at Reno has a dummy standing out in front, by the sidewalk, dressed up in good style, as an advertisement of their goods. Many people see a great resemblance between the dummy and the proprietor, and there is a very sprightly young miss in town who he is soft on, but who hates and despises him so bad that she can't help hitting the dummy impersonation a sly slap or poke whenever she passes it. The other evening, in company with another young miss, she was going past and seeing what she supposed was that miserable dummy standing in front of the store, she gave it a severe jab in the abdomen with her parasol. To her horror, he doubled up like a jack-knife, with both hands clasped across his belly, as he roared out: 'Sheesus christ! Ach, Gott in Himmel! Vot der tuyfel you do dot for?" She and her companion gave a scream or two, and were hurrying around the corner about that time never stopping to eath their breath until they reached home. She passes that clothing shop no more, and the proprietor has ceased admiring her. He wants no more dummy in his.

ANOTHER TRANSCONTINENTAL LINE.—Still another railway between the Missouri River and the Pacific Ocean is likely to be added to the list within the next two years. It has long been the secret purpose of the controlling spirits of the Chicago and Northwestern Railway to push that great system westward, entirely across the continent, and that intention seems to be taking tangible shape. It is now well understood that the company is crowding its Fremont, Elkhorn and Missouri Valley line across Nebraska into Wyoming, but its further destination has been mainly a matter of surmise. The Railway age now ventures a surmise that a connection with the Central Pacific is not the object of this costly and difficult work of construction across the mountains of Wyoming, but that the bold idea is entertained of pushing still farther on across the greater part of the Territory of Idaho until Boise City is reached.—[Times Review.
