

SAYS PARK ROUTE IMPRACTICAL

(From Salt Lake Tribune of June 11) Southern California, through Charles E. McStay, representing the Automobile Club of Southern California, one of the largest motoring organizations in the world, voiced the first real objection to the present routing of the park-to-park highway at the opening of the second annual convention of the National Park-to-Park Highway association yesterday afternoon in the Hotel Utah.

"This is my first experience when a wheel was built that it did not possess a hub and spokes," Mr. Day said. "Never in the world can the idea of a 6000-mile trip of this kind be sold to the public. The circuit, as it is, must be divided with a spoke to the northwest to Mt. Rainier park, on the south to Grand Canyon, on the North to Yellowstone park and Glacier park, on the east to the Rocky Mountain National park and on the southwest to Yosemite National park.

"Salt Lake is the hub of the western machine. At Washington the board of strategy of the United States army has indicated that should the Pacific coast be attacked, it would be abandoned and the forces would fall back to Salt Lake, the natural base.

"The present route is too impracticable to be followed by more than one in a thousand. You of this territory will be taxed to the utmost to provide accommodations for the travelers we will send to these parks over direct routes, but I doubt very much that you will be overtaxed with tourist travel should the present system

Mr. Day then went on record against the present park-to-park route as a final choice for travel.

"I think I am supported by Utah and Idaho," he said.

The continued applause from the large number of delegates present from the two states indicated affirmation.

Misunderstandings and arguments waxed somewhat hot in the session of the credentials committee, which was arranged to consider the credentials of all the delegates present, and to ascertain their eligibility for participation in the discussion of the highway affairs.

MOTOR TRUCK SPEED

Motor truck speed, says E. H. Gere of Flint, Mich., in The Efficiency Magazine, is a hobby with him, but his hobby takes the line of not to get speed but to reduce speed.

"One man will come along and tell you," he says, "that if you buy his tires you can travel 18 miles an hour, another 20 miles and so on, but the question has occurred to me as to the actual harm it does to the motor. We all know that it is going to shorten the life of the motor if you are going to 'step on it' day in and day out."

Mr. Gere then cited the case of a truck, which was run at its governor speed of about 12 miles an hour. When it went to the repair shop after one year's use it was found that the truck cost $250 more than its entire earnings.

"By fortune, or otherwise," he adds, "we cut the speed of our truck from governor speed down to eight miles an hour—and we took the governors off. From that time on we have run our trucks eight miles an hour.

"And that truck last summer cleared nearly as much as any other two in our entire fleet. On one job this truck never lost a day in five and one-half months. The minute the governor gives me the least bit of trouble, out it comes—I am the governor of our fleet."

THE YEAR OF THE GREAT REST

Seven years ago the world war began and since that time production has been under high pressure. Now things have slowed down. They have sagged. In a sense, 1921 is a rest year, a sort of Sabbath time, when the need of greater production as well as the inclination toward strenuousness, is absent. We see signs of this on every hand—in unemployment of labor, in reduced output of factories, and more or less curtailment of agricultural activities. Probably this is a natural thing, and a good thing. It gives us a chance to take up the slack, to gather up the loose ends occasioned by a long period of high pressure production. Some corn growers who already have their cribs full are resting part of their acreage and restoring fertility by clover that is to be plowed under. Orchardists whose fruit buds have been killed by frost are cutting back their trees. Everywhere fences are being repaired, buildings being re-roofed and painted, pastures being cleaned up, fence corners mowed, lawns trimmed. The wise farmer is not pessimistic now. He is giving his place a sort of Sunday "shine" and general renovation as he waits for the revival which will follow the readjustment.—Farm Life.

SOME GIRL

I know a girl in Arkansasaw Who can saw more wood than her paw can saw. Who takes a little drink, And spends a little chink, And chaws more tobaccoer than her maw can chew.

HE ADVERTISED

"There was a man in our town, And he was wondrous wise, He swore by all the dogs that be, He would not advertise. At last one day he advertised, And thereby hangs a tale— The ad was set in nonpariel, And headed 'Sheriff's Sale.'"
