UNCLE JOHN'S POEM

TOO BAD—OLD MAN

When you find yourself entangled in the meshes of despair, till you wouldn't know a blessing if you had it by the hair,—it probably was justice that connived to land you there.

Too bad, old man, too bad! If you chance to be affected with the appetite for bliss, till there ain't no dissipation that you feel inclined to miss,—remember, Mister Rounder, there's a hotter world than this.

Too bad, old man, too bad! If you harbor the opinion that you're double extry smart, but can't afford the camouflage to make you look the part,—you ain't beyond redemption, but you better watch yer heart.

Too bad, old man, too bad! And when you feel religiouser than others you could name, and talk about yer neighbors in an effort to defame,—remember that humanity is purty much the same,— Too bad, old man, too bad!

Your Own UNCLE JOHN.

HONEY PHILOSOPHY FOR 1921

When many of us were young, a common exclamation was: "I'm as happy as a king!" Who is so forlorn as to say that today? To be as happy as a king these days is to be unhappy indeed. What a change has come over the world in the matter of ruling and rulers! Never before was the "head that wears a crown" so uneasy.
