

UTAH-IDAHO SUGAR COMPANY

Growers of beets for the Utah-Idaho Co. last year have just received from the company a notice that the price of sugar sold by the company between Oct. 1 1921 and the same date 1922 averaged $5.05 so that there is no bonus to divide between the growers and the company.

The large surplus stocks held over from the 1920 and '21 production has been slowly disposed of and it is only within the past few weeks that the Blackfoot factory has disposed of last year's product.

000 for beets and $87,000 for labor. This year there was not acreage signed up to warrant the factory running. It is estimated that about 30,000 tons will be shipped from this section, to the Idaho Falls factory with between 10 and 12 tons to the acre.

The sugar company was a far heavier sufferer from the slump in sugar in the latter part of 1920 than was the farmer. And by the company is not meant a few rich men, but thousands of small stockholders who had put their small savings into a home enterprise which up to that time had paid them from eight to ten per cent on their money, which is not an excessive return for stock investments, as it only represents an interest in the profits.

The company lost millions of dollars on their sugar sales in 1920 and recently the directors reduced the par value of the stock from $10 to $6, thus wiping out two-fifths of the outstanding stock.
