REVELATIONS OF A WIFE

—By Adele Garrison

"Then You Must Be His Margaret?"

"Ah! Here we are!" said Miss Sonnot. Tucked away between two pages of her cherished scrapbook was a small envelope. Opening it, she drew out a number of clipped newspaper paragraphs, selected one and passed it to me.

"What do you think of it?" she asked. I took it mechanically. My mind was far away from the impromptu midnight chafing dish supper we had planned when, unable to sleep, we had met each other in the dining room.

For as Miss Sonnot turned the pages of her scrapbook containing her most prized mementoes and clippings, I had caught a glimpse of a photograph which I was sure was Jack Bickett's. What it was doing there I could not imagine. I was sure I knew the name of every woman Jack had ever met, for I had always been in his confidence.

The little incident jarred me more than I was willing to admit. I felt that I must satisfy myself that the photograph was really Jack's, and, if so, how it came into her possession. But I had a strange reluctance to ask her outright. In the meantime I must give her a verdict on the recipe she had handed me. I had not seen a word of it, although I had been looking straight at it. I read it rapidly to myself.

Fry three slices of bacon crisp, remove them, and in the same fat cook one sliced onion until light brown. Beat three eggs slightly, season with cayenne, and three tablespoonfuls of thick stewed tomato, the fried onions and the crisp bacon, finely crumbled. Turn into a greased chafing pan, and pick it up with a fork as the egg thickens, then let it cook slightly, roll over and turn on to a hot platter.

"This sounds very appetizing." I said, looking at her with a curious, questioning gaze. As her eyes met mine, the expression on her face changed instantly. But I knew that her alertness had seen my momentary confusion.

"Do you think we can manage it without raising the house?" she asked abruptly. "When I spoke of it I did not realize it was quite so complicated. Frying onions is no joke at midnight."

"We'll do all that in the kitchen, with the outside door open to take away the odor," I decided quickly. "and we won't attach the chafing dish at all. I'll put the blazer over a pan of hot water on the gas stove, and when our concoction is done we'll eat it immediately. I am really hungry, aren't you?"

"Ravenous!" returned the little nurse, smiling, and we went into the kitchen. "Suppose there should be no onion," she said with burlesque tragedy. "But there it is!" I announced triumphantly.

"Are both giggled, as if we had said something wonderfully original and humorous. We were like two youngsters let out of school, we women, both used to self-repression.

both schooled in life's hardships. I had conceived a genuine liking for the little nurse. I was sure she returned my feelings. My enjoyment of our little bark would have been perfect, save for my wonderment over the presence of Jack Bickett's picture in her scrapbook.

Our omelet was a success. Miss Sonnot attended to its final heating in the chafing dish while I saw to it that the coffee was kept hot, opened a bottle of stuffed olives I had found, and provided generous portions of bread and butter for each of us.

"This is the psychological moment," she said gaily, as she bore the chafing dish in from the kitchen, and I followed with a hot platter in my hand. "I do hope it's right."

"Perfection!" I murmured admiringly, as she carefully turned the dimly browned concoction out on the platter. "Let's not waste a minute."

We are both healthy young women, with good appetites, and we thoroughly enjoyed our impromptu little meal. We ate the last crumb of the omelet, drank two cups of coffee apiece, and then looked at each other sheepishly.

"I feel like a gorged anaconda," said Miss Sonnot. "I hope no one needs a nurse before morning. I should hate to exert myself in any way."

"But are you sleepy?" I asked, hoping she would reply in the negative. I felt that I did not wish to go back to bed until I learned the reason Jack's picture was among her effects.

"Not a bit," she answered promptly. "Then casually, 'Would you like to look at my scrapbook?' It has some interesting little souvenirs in it of experiences I have had."

"Would I?" My heart beat more quickly at the question, but I made my voice nonchalant. "Indeed, I should enjoy it very much. Come down to the end of the table away from the debris of the feast. We can clear up afterward."

With our heads close together we bent over the book, lingering over many little scraps and pictures she had picked up. As she turned the page to the kodak pictures, she said with a carelessness that I was sure was assumed:

"These are just some kodak prints of myself and some of my friends. You wouldn't be interested?"

"But I am, tremendously," I answered, putting an unsteady hand out to prevent her turning the page. I looked at the pictures, and confirmed the impression I had received when I first saw the page.

It was Jack Bickett's photograph. I schooled my voice to a sort of careless surprise.

"Why! Isn't this Jack Bickett?" she started perceptibly. "Yes, do you know him?"

Some Health Facts

—By Dr. J. N. Hurty.

Diphtheria carriers are persons who harbor diphtheria germs in the secretions of either their nose or throat. When the scientists first found diphtheria germs in the throats and noses of well people they were stumped, for how could they be there and the persons be free from the disease? Now we know carriers enjoy immunity, that is, while the germs grow well in the throat the body neutralizes their poison. Whenever diphtheria breaks out in a school you may expect to find one or more children in that room who are carriers. They must be discovered and removed from the school otherwise those who are susceptible will sooner or later come down with the disease. It is the same with all the infectious diseases. There are carriers of whooping cough, scarlet fever, measles, chicken pox, etc., who can only be discovered by the bacteriologist. Every health officer should be trained in bacteriology.

Under our present health officer system, any doctor, whether trained or not in bacteriology or in sanitary science, can be appointed a health officer. Obviously, only trained men should be health officers. To be trained and even highly skilled in curative medicine does not fit one for preventive medicine. Indiana is behind several other states in not having a law providing health officers.

All nourished school children are not few, for there is probably not a single under grade school room in this state that does not have in it one or more children who suffer from malnutrition. This is a health problem of the first magnitude, not because the health officers do not know how to solve it, but because the people won't let them, except in a few instances. In a few instances the nutrition is low because of disease, but generally it is because of that parental ignorance known as unhygienic living. Tea, coffee and rotten teeth will knock out the nutrition of any child. Eating at irregular hours, candy between meals, getting late to bed and sleeping in unventilated rooms, will also play the devil with a child's nutrition. An unbalanced diet is a great cause and so is rapid eating. Malnutrition is rarely the result of lack of food. There is more malnutrition among country school children than among those in cities. This fact is well established. Soggy bread, fried meats, fried potatoes, soggy pie, do up many children. These people don't know and many will not believe or heed when told that milk is absolutely necessary to keep a growing child in health. Milk contains growing substances found in no other food. Every school child should have at least one pint of milk in his noon lunch. It is safe to say a well enforced law making it an assault upon children for parents not to give them clean milk, would greatly lessen child morbidity and mortality. It would also result in a larger percentage of eligibles for soldiers.

I suggest a law because most parents will not accept education and in this matter, as is abundantly proven by extended experience, it is an assault upon children for parents not to give them clean milk, would greatly lessen child morbidity and mortality. It would also result in a larger percentage of eligibles for soldiers.

Back yards and character are closely connected. Shaw me a dirty back yard and I will show you a household whose character is not high. Best Hart once wrote a story in which he pointed out that one must look at the back and not the front of a man's house for an insight into the occupants' character. "Cleanliness is next to Godliness," and no man can be a Christian and a good citizen who has a dirty back yard. Dirty back yards are emphatically of dirty people. People of good character are cleanly. Do you know of a dirty town? If you do you know a town where dirty people are in the majority.

A SAMPLE OF GERMAN METHODS.
An example of German methods of securing food is seen in the new regulations of the Bavarian egg supply office. Poultry keepers are required to deliver to the government 40 eggs for each hen dept.

The 1918 quota is due in Sept. at a fixed price of 4 cents per egg. Measures of this character help to explain the ability of the German federal states to feed the population when food products fall to reach the markets in sufficient quantities as a result of voluntary sales by producers.

HOW TO KEEP HONEY.
In selling honey as a substitute for sugar the retail grocer and his customers may encounter some difficulty through lack of knowledge of storing and handling this product, according to the American Food Journal. Housewives usually put their honey in the cellar for safe keeping, probably the worst possible place, as honey absorbs moisture from the atmosphere and will become thin and in time sour. Comb honey kept in a damp place will be hurt in appearance as well as in quality. A practicable rule is to keep honey in any place where salt remains dry. If any place has granulated or candied, put the can containing it in a large vessel holding water no hotter than the hand can be borne in. If the water is too hot, there is danger of spoiling the honey and ruining the flavor of the color. The can of honey should be supported on a block of wood in the vessel of water, so that the heat from the stove will not be too intense.

"Why Should I Buy Beacon Cotton Blankets?"

For this reason— BECAUSE—

The Beacon Blanket is sanitary—does not attract or retain dirt or germs, and being less absorbent of moisture than wool is an assurance of dry, healthful bedding. Perhaps no better proof of this can be given than its rapid adoption by hospitals, where its sanitary properties are particularly recognized.

The Beacon Blanket is warmer than wool, being more closely woven. The Beacon Blanket can be readily washed.

The Beacon Blanket does not shrink. The Beacon Blanket being made entirely of cotton is not subject to the destruction wrought by moths.

The Beacon Blanket is delightfully soft and fluffy in finish—finer than the finest wool, and—last but not least—

The Beacon Blanket may be purchased for less than half the price of a wool blanket, although it serves every purpose of the latter and serves it better.
