REVELATIONS OF A WIFE

By Adele Garrison

WHY MADGE BECAME VERY MUCH UPSET OVER PROSPECTS OF LOSING KATE.

I felt my face flush miserably when Jim Gregg blurted out the information that he and Katie had been "getting engaged this evening" and were "going to get married pretty soon."

Mother Graham had heard a noise in the kitchen and had summoned me to go with her to investigate it.

We had found the table set for a spread with a profusion of our food, and Katie and Jim snugly ensconced in the big rocking chair.

The memory of Mother Graham's insulting words to the girl made my cheeks burn. My mind went back swiftly to the never-to-be-forgotten night when Dicky and I had plighted our troth. I remembered it as if it were but an hour before.

We were sitting in one of the small parlors of Mrs. Stewart's home in Brooklyn, where my mother and I had lived so many years, and where, after her death, I had stayed until my marriage to Dicky.

Mrs. Stewart had been Jack Bickel's staunchest partisan. She disliked Dicky intensely, yet she never in any manner disturbed us. I thought, with a shuddering horror, of what it would have meant to Dicky and me if some one had rudely broken in upon us in the sacred moments after he had asked and I had answered the most momentous question of our lives.

My heart went out to Katie with remorse and sympathy. I went swiftly over to the girl and took her twisting, fluttering, angry hands in my own.

"Will You Forgive Me?" "Katie, dear," I said softly, "will you forgive me? I am so sorry this has happened. If you had told me you expected Jim I would not have disturbed you. I'm very glad for your happiness, Katie. Eat your supper now and tell me all about it tomorrow."

I turned to the shy six-footer standing beside her. "I congratulate you, Jim," I said, holding out my hand. "Katie is a dear good girl. Come to see her often."

My mother-in-law was standing as if petrified when I turned to her from Jim. Her face was dark with disapproval of my handling the situation, but to my great surprise she did not speak. I thought, with a little triumphant thrill, that evidently she remembered and meant to abide by the ultimatum I had given her on the occasion of her outrageous treatment of Lillian Underwood.

I had told her then that I would always make her welcome in our home and treat her with all deference, but that I would never allow her to interfere in any personal concern of mine. Was it possible that she meant to abide by those words quietly.

She preceded me out of the room, paying no attention whatever to the voluble and tearful thanks which Katie was pouring out to me.

When I joined her in the hall we Grace Evangelical church will hold an all day sewing meeting.

Y. W. C. A. TO ORGANIZE CLASSES IN ELEMENTARY HYGIENE, HOME CARE OF THE SICK AND FIRST AID.

To aid the Red Cross committee on home nursing in supplying its quota of workers from this district the Y. W. C. Nursing is one of the most popular kinds of work a girl can do and yet there are but few girls who realize the necessity of making that profession their profession. In the emergency which this country finds itself it has need for not only more professional nurses for the Red Cross and home service, but it is soon to call on those who have certificates from the Red Cross showing that they have successfully completed the courses in instruction such as the Y.
