STATE COUNCIL OF DEFENSE MEETING POSTPONED.

Word has been received by Mrs. K. C. DeRhodes that the meeting of the woman's section of the state council of defense to have been held at Purdue university, Oct. 15, will not be held.

MOTOR CORPS TRANSFER SANCTIONED.

Mrs. K. C. DeRhodes, woman member of the county council of defense, has received the following letter signed by Mrs. Anne Studebaker Carlisle, woman member of the state council of defense, and Col. Helen Dean chairman of Indiana Motor corps explaining the transfer of the Motor corps to the Red Cross. From now on the work of our Motor corps will be conducted by the Red Cross.

"Since the Lake division of the Red Cross, authorized Washington, has announced the need of its own motor service in Ohio, Kentucky and Indiana, the woman's section of the Indiana state council of defense has graciously offered the Motor corps of Indiana to the Red Cross, since we feel that it would be unfortunate to have two motor corps in the state of Indiana.

"The reasons for this action on the part of the Red Cross are as follows:

"1. Hospital work is handled entirely by the Red Cross, and this requires ambulance and motor cars

REVELATIONS OF A WIFE

HOW MADGE FACED HER FIRST "EXTRAVAGANCE"

In spite of Lillian Underwood's kindly admonition I could not enjoy the delicious lunch we had ordered in the little English tea room. The presence of a mysterious man at the table opposite ours robbed the meal of its flavor and me of my self-possession.

I could not be sure, of course, that the man had purposely followed me from the little reception room of the Sydenham, where I had waited for Lillian. There I had first seen him staring frankly at me with such a sad, mysterious, tragic look in his eyes that I had been most bewildered and upset by it. But his appearance at the tea room within a few minutes of our entering it, and his choice of a chair which faced our table indicated rather strongly that he had purposely followed me.

Whether or not Lillian's flashing eyes and the withering look she gave him deterred him from gazing at me as steadily as he had at the hotel I had no means of knowing. At any rate, he did not once stare openly at me. I should have known it if he had, for his position was such that unless I kept my eyes steadily fixed upon my plate I could not help but see him. He was unobtrusive, but I received the impression that he was keeping track of our every movement in the furtive glances he cast at us from time to time.

"Simply Ignore Him." Although he had ordered after us, his meal kept pace with our own. In fact, he called for his check, paid it and left the restaurant before we did. As he passed out of the door I drew a breath of relief and fell to my neglected lunch.

"I hope I've seen the last of him," I said vindictively. Lillian did not answer. I looked up surprised to see her chin cupped in her hands, in the attitude which was characteristic of her when she was studying some problem, her eyes following the man as he went, swinging his stick with a pre-occupied air. She continued to stare after him until he was out of sight, then, with a start, she came back to herself.

"You were right, Madge, and I was wrong," she said reflectively, still as if she were studying her problem, "that is no matter."

I looked up startled. "What makes you think so?" she returned, "but he either thinks he knows you, or you remind him of some dead daughter, or sister—or sweetheart, or—of that might be any one of a dozen reasons why he would want to stare at you. I think he's harmless, though. He probably won't ever try to speak to you—just take it out in following you around and looking at you."

"Oh, I gasped, "do you think he's going to keep this up?" "Looks like it," Lillian, "but simply ignore him. He has all the earmarks of a gentleman. I don't think he will annoy you. Now forget him and enjoy your ice, and then we'll go and get that hat."

Under Lillian's guidance the selection of the hat proved an easy task.

"One of These." "You poor child," she said, "tramping around through those big shops with their thousands of hats, it's a wonder you didn't land at Bellevue instead of at luncheon with me. We won't waste any more time hunting things. There is a little side street shop up here, and the woman who keeps it is a genius. She was head designer for one of the biggest New York firms for years, and she has entire to the exclusive Parisian establishments.

"On each trip from Paris she brings a number of actual models, of course, but there are a number of others that she brings only in her brain and sketch book. All she needs is a glimpse of any hat. She can go back to her hotel, sketch it accurately from memory, and jot down the materials of which it is made. She has built up a very substantial clientele of women with good taste and pocketbooks that will stand a moderate strain, for, of course, she never makes a really cheap hat. I've bought every hat under the direction of the Red Cross. "2. The canteens will all be under the Red Cross and must be served by their own Red Cross Motor corps. "3. Overseas applicants from Red Cross Motor corps will have preference over applicants from other corps. "The Red Cross will allow its corps to do all other work that can be handled."

I've worn from her for years." Lillian's enthusiasm prepared me to like the smart hats displayed in the modest yet tastefully appointed little establishment we entered a few minutes later.

A tall, slender woman, with an attractive face, surmounted with a crown of gray hair, and attired in a modish black gown of rich material, rose from a desk at the back of the shop as she caught sight of Lillian, and came forward with hand extended.

"I've brought you a very dear friend of mine, Miss Denman," Lillian said, as she clasped the outstretched hand warmly. "This is Mrs. Graham, Miss Denman," she went on. "See that you find something that suits her face."

"That ought to be a very easy task," Miss Denman returned, smiling down at me.

"Yes, shouldn't it?" Lillian rejoined, with an answering smile.

I felt a trifle foolish and a bit annoyed at the undisguised flattery which the older woman was giving me, but I knew the real affection behind Lillian's compliment, and the words of the other woman lacked the fulsome insincerity which marks the manner of so many of her type.

I was not long in selecting the hat I wanted. Miss Denman took one long, shrewd, appraising look at me; then gave an assistant a low-toned direction. The girl vanished, to reappear again, shortly bearing three hats, each of which deserved, if headgear ever did, the much abused term "creation."

"I should advise one of these three for Mrs. Graham," she said quietly.

I tried them all on, with little exclamation of delight at their beauty, but the last, a chic little affair of black velvet with the brim slightly rolled, the sombre color enlivened only by touches of white ermine, with a single perfect scarlet rose nesting against the fur, seemed especially suited to my face.

Why Madge gasped. Miss Denman stepped up, pushed it ever so slightly to one side, turned my hair out gently from beneath it, then said quietly to Lillian: "That's about it, eh?"

"Simply perfect," Lillian answered, and as I looked at the reflection of the hat in the glass I felt that her encomium was not too strong.

"What is the price of it?" I asked. "You are fortunate," said Miss Denman smiling. "It is the cheapest one of the three. It will cost you $35."

I gasped. My ideas of the prices of hats came from my memories of my teaching days when my salary had to cover all my mother's expenses as well as my own. I had paid $15 for the hat in which I was married, and had mentally condemned myself for what I termed my reckless extravagance. My summer hats had been fairly inexpensive affairs, so that the price staggered me.

"I think Lillian saw my dismay," she said tactfully. "This will be such a useful little hat, Madge. Being black and white you can wear it with almost any costume." Her tone and words conveyed subtly to me the impression that she felt I ought to take the hat.

I remembered Dicky's injunction—"for heaven's sake not to consider the price"—and decided wisely to make a plunge.

"It is, indeed, beautiful," I said nonchalantly. "I will take it."

"Where shall I send it?" I thought rapidly for a moment. I wanted it for Wednesday afternoon's meeting of the Study club, but I should not need it during my mountain trip. Lillian, with her usual quickness, solved the difficulty.

"As you're going out of town, Madge, why not send it up to my apartment," she said. "You can run up and get it on Wednesdays, and I'll keep it for you while you're gone."

"Thank you, Lillian, that will do very nicely," I returned.

But as I paid for the hat and left the store, I wondered if I should never be able to spend money freely for clothes, as Dicky would like to have me, without the little guilty feeling at my extravagance that I was experiencing now.

WYPISZYNSKI WORKS OVERTIME WHEN "FLU" CLOSSES CHURCH DOORS. The order closing all churches of the city did not affect the semi-religious ceremonies performed by Justice Joseph Wypiszynski on Sunday. The justice was called from his beauty nap about 9 o'clock Sunday morning by two local police, Arley R. Hilligas and Yressa Schuster of this city, who besought him to tie the marriage knot. Inasmuch as none of the pastors of the city was working that day, the justice performed the ceremony with as much solemnity as possible.

Wypiszynski stated Monday that the influenza continues to keep the houses of worship closed on Sundays; he intends to maintain certain hours "at home" to meet the occasion.

Herman H. Grab and Bulu Miller were married at their home, 404 Lincoln way W., Sunday afternoon by the justice.

The roll call for the mechanics who will leave Oct. 15 for Inter-laken school and Warsaw was held Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

CITY WILL ASK FOR MORE FUNDS

To Present Ordinances Making Appropriations at Council Meeting Tonight.

Members of the city administration, including the heads of the various departments, met in Mayor Carson's office this morning and discussed a number of appropriation ordinances to be presented to the city council tonight.

The administration will ask the council to appropriate from the general fund to the funds of the various departments sufficient money to tide them over until the first of the year, when the funds fixed by the 1919 budget will be available.

The board of works will ask for an extra appropriation of $28,000. Of this amount $15,000 will go into the lighting fund. This fund, the board says, has been depleted on account of bills left over from last year that were paid out of this year's appropriation, and it will take in the neighborhood of $15,000 to carry the lighting fund through the first of the year.

The balance of the appropriation to be asked for by the board of works will be distributed over a number of funds, including the city hall fund, a miscellaneous fund, street and alley fund and garbage fund.

Other department heads will also make a request for additional funds to carry them over to the first of the year. The ordinances and the amounts of their appropriations were discussed at the general meeting of city officials held in the mayor's office this morning.

BEGIN WORK ON IMPROVEMENTS

Portage Av. Paving and Extension of Water Mains Are Started.

Two important pieces of public work, one the improvement of Portage av. from Kinyon st. to the city limits and the other the extension of the city water mains and sewer pipes to the Oliver tract in the southwest part of the city where the government plans to erect 250 houses, were begun Monday morning.

The White Construction Co. began the Portage av. improvement. Much of the material for the improvement arrived in the city Saturday night, and was on the ground early Monday morning.

City workmen began the preliminary work necessary to the extension of the city water mains and the sewer system to the Oliver tract to connect them with the new 250 houses to be erected there by the government to take care of the workmen to be employed in South Bend plants making war supplies.

Mayor Carson received word Saturday from Washington instructing the city to begin the extension of the water mains and city sewer system to the Oliver tract at once, and complying with the government's instructions, the work was begun Monday morning.
