

Factors at Council Banquet

Patton Studio

The banquet given Friday evening at the Savoy Ballroom by the South Central Community Council was a tremendous success. The beautiful structure was crowded with persons interested in building up their own community. Mrs. Robert A. Cole, chairman of reception and entertainment committee, and Mrs. Evelyn Evans, chairman of publicity worked untiringly to make the banquet a success, and the program an entertaining feature. They secured the services of Mrs. George Cleveland Hall, who brought greetings from the social life of the community, and Mrs. Maude Roberts George, who spoke of the artistic side Mrs. Walter Abernathy, Mrs. Malcolm Vineberg, and Mrs. Lulu E. Lawson gave their whole hearted support to Mmes. Cole and Evans in promoting the affair. Mmes. Hall and George were among the distinguished guests who sat at the speaker's table with his honor, Mayor Edward J. Kelly. In the picture are seen sitting, left to right: Mrs. Hall and Cole, standing, left to right, Mmes. Abernathy, George, Evans, Vineberg and Lawson.

First Aid to the Love-sick

By NURSE MARY GRAY

"In the spring, a young man's love lightly turns to fancy." I was called to the Isle of Capri on an emergency case last week. Grabbing my first-aid kit of sympathy and understanding and tugging in a bit of homely philosophy, I boarded the 5:15. My patient met me at the station, and she hadn't the vaguest idea of what she looked like. I knew her at once by her desolate expression. She began her story at once: "We've been going together for four years," she told me with tears in her eyes, "and we were to have been married last winter, but we had to wait until fall on account of his business. And now he just doesn't seem interested any more. I just can't understand it," she wailed, "all this time we've never had an argument."

In this last statement I detected the whole trouble. I opened my kit and took out my homely philosophy. "Variety is the spice of life," being the first dose, I advised my patient to change the situation immediately. Have an argument—a small difference that can be easily and quickly patched up—but an argument. "Any subject will suffice," I told her, "the way he parts his hair, the way his eye-lashes curl (or don't curl), music, anything little thing." This was received rather doubtfully by my patient, but administering the second dose I assured her that "Lovers break up just to make up." The best (and sweetest) part of an argument is always the making up. This rather appealed to her sense of humor and she began to smile through her tears. She repeated her tumor with difficulty, however, as a very personable young gentleman approached her. "Here he is," she whispered hurriedly. "Then to him," I thought you were going to be here at 6 o'clock," she said crossly. His perception vanished into thin air, his interest was aroused. "Well, you see," she said. "No, I don't see!" By this time he was wide awake and actually snoring. Could this be the lady well-known for so many years who had never spoken a cross word to him in all that time and who he always accepted with such equanimity? A rather faint fear arose of itself, jealousy reared its green head—could it? "Aw, Mary," he began, his tone was tender and humble persuasion personified. "Don't 'Mar' me!" she retorted suppressing a smile with an effort. I gathered up my kit and scrambled back on my train. They didn't even miss me. As we rared out of the station, she looked back and I saw her wink happily. I leaned back in my seat with relief, mentally wording my report to my department head, Dr. Cupid. "Condition not serious. Patient needs stimulus. Stimulus applied. Results satisfactory." This off my mind, I settled down to lighter subjects, taking up my "Rise and Fall of the Roman Empire" where I had left off.

Mayor Edward J. Kelly, who is seeking to make Chicago the trade center of America and is planning for a "Chicago Fair" on the lake front which would attract hundreds of thousands of visitors here every year. His Honor announced this week that he had also secured for the Windy City the 1st annual Recreation Congress, which meets here September 30-October 4.

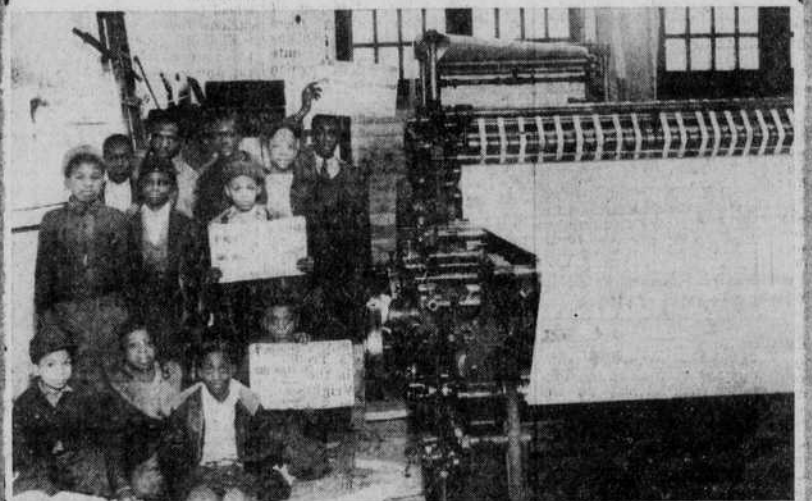

Mayor Edward J. Kelly announced this week that he had secured for Chicago the Twenty-first National Recreation Congress which will convene here Sept. 30-October 4 with headquarters at the Sherman Hotel.

The conference, which will be held under the auspices of the National Recreation Association which has headquarters in New York City, is expected to bring here one thousand United States and Canadian park and recreation officials, educators, sociologists, executives of semi-public recreation agencies, and other delegates interested in public recreation. Chicago was the meeting place of the first recreation congress to be held in the United States which met here in 1907. Accept Mayor's Invitation "Chicago was elected for the twenty-first Recreation Congress in part because of the inspiration and information its park and recreation system and water-front developments will give to delegates," stated Joseph Lee, president of the National Recreation Association, in accepting Mayor Kelly's invitation to this city. "No single city has influenced the direction of park and playground developments in the United States more than has Chicago. Ever since the launching of the South Park playground and field house project in 1903, which excited the enthusiasm of no less personality than President Theodore Roosevelt, Chicago has pioneered in the construction of recreation facilities for recreational activities.
