

FROM VAUDEVILLE

(John and Mae Burke)

"Are you a soldier?"

"You bet I'm a soldier."

"What kind of a soldier are you?"

"I'm a boy slouch. But you say you are a soldier, too."

"Yes, there are 5,000 women in my army."

"Five thousand women. I want to join. I'm a home guard."

"What are the duties of a home guard?"

"Why, I stay home and take care of the regular soldiers' wives."

"Were you ever in a regular battle?"

"I lived with my mother-in-law two years."

"That wasn't a battle."

"No, that was a riot."

"Are you brave?"

"I should say so. I hadn't been in the army two weeks before I saved the entire regiment."

"You did! How?"

"I shot the cook."

Physician—This man's condition is not due to drink. He's been drugged.

Policeman (turning pale and speaking timidly)—I'm afraid ye're right, sir, I drugged him all the way—a matter of a hundred yards or more.

n. y.—there are sum peepul who can prove your rite when your rong and rong when your rite and it dont matter much eether way to them they are that handy with proving arguments

& littel susie murphy is inclined to be that way & she gets buy with it too when she was at Sunday Skool last Sundy the teacher says animals cant go to heven like children and old folks because they are animals

but little susie raises her hand and chirps up, please teacher i think our cat tabby will go to heven when she dies

o no, says the teacher miss hendricks by name, what makes you think that well, replys littel susie, the bibel says the promised land is flowing with milk and honey, and if there aint no kittens there what will become of the milk thats left over from supper every day the teacher didnt know.

& i gess they must have bees too or else where do they get there honey

A wealthy western farmer wrote on a postcard to an old lady friend in Kansas: "Ten days here in Monte Carlo—have lost 12 pounds and a shilling."

"Great Scott!" exclaimed the old lady, "haven't they got any health laws in that country?"

Newlywed Husband (at dinner)—This lettuce is something fierce. Did you wash it?

Mrs. Newlywed—Of course I did! And I used perfumed soap, too!
