THE DETECTIVE'S STORY.

MR. PINKERTON'S NARRATIVE OF THE TRAGIC EVENTS ON THE STEAMBOAT.

[From the Memphis Avalanche.]

Yesterday afternoon an Avalanche representative had a conversation with W. A. Pinkerton in reference to the escape of Hilliard Farrington from him, mention of which has been made in the Avalanche.

PINKERTON'S STORY.

Mr. Pinkerton says that after leaving St. Louis with Barton and Farrington, he noticed that the latter was working continously at his handcuffs. Farrington had nothing to say, and lay with his head against a window, as if in deep thought. Just before arriving at Cairo Mr. Pinkerton fastened up Farrington's cuffs so tightly as to hurt him somewhat. Farrington told him that they hurt, and Mr. Pinkerton said: "I can't help it if they do. I am going to

TAKE NO CHANCES

On your getting away from me." When about half way to Columbus on the boat, Farrington, who still had on his handcuffs and feet shackles, said that he wanted to talk with Mr. Pinkerton about the matter. They went out on the guards together and were standing near the bar-room door. After taking for some time, Farrington said, "So you are going to trouble my mother, are you, after arresting both of us boys?" meaning himself and Levi

Pinkerton replied: "Yes, I am, it she don't give up that money."

"You are, are you," responded Farrington, and with a sudden movement he thrust both hands, manacled, into Mr. Pinkerton's right hand overcoat pocket and which he drew out. With one hand Mr. Pinkerton grasped Farrington by the throat and with the other caught his hands. Detective Connell was at the time coming out of the wash-room, a few feet distant, and Pinkerton seeing him hallooed for him to come to his aid. He did so, and grasped his pistol, which exploded at the time, the bullet carrying away some of Mr. Pinkerton's hair. All this time

GRASPED A PISTOL,

FARRINGTON AND PINKERTON WERE STRUGGLING,

The former having his back to the guard-railing and river. When the pistol fired Farrington dropped it, and Pinkerton, half stunned by the report, loosened his grasp, and Farrington threw his hands above his head and

FELL BACKWARDS IN THE RIVER.

Sinking directly in front of and not more than ten feet distant from the wheel, which must have struck him. As soon as he saw him falling, Connell drew his revolver and fired at Farrington.

CERTAINLY DEAD.

The boat did stop; a yawl was lowered and search made for the missing prisoner. At the time it was not yet fairly daylight, and there was a thin crust of ice on the river. Farrington's hands and feet were manaced, and he wore a very heavy overcoat, of itself almost sufficient to prevent him from swimming ashore, had his hands and feet been free. They assert that the boat at the time was 150 yards from shore.

In this connection it is due the detectives to state that the officers of the express company here are satisfied that both Pinkerton and Connell did their duty, and have full confidence in their statements.

NERVOUS DEBILITY,
