IMPROMPTU.

To one who will understand.

BY GLENDORA.

You asked me to write you a letter
And begged that I would not refuse.
I've been thinking the matter all over,
And know not what subject to choose.

The new song, that I have been learning
Has discorded so harshly to-night
I'm thinking my "Goddess of Music"
Has certainly taken her flight—

And left me to brood over fancies
And, of eyes that are tender and true,
For, to-night I've been thinking, my darling,
Of "Banking hours,"—and you.

And of that bright morning last summer
When sadly in need of some change,
I went to the "Bank" for the favor
And certainly thought it so strange—

That when I had asked you the question
Your eyes so coldly met mine
As you answered, "the Bank is not open"
"Please call around about nine."

Some persons, it might have offended,
But I was really amused,
That for once, I had asked you a favor
And been so coldly refused.

Let it pass—I admired your frankness
And thought as I turned away,
If others would practice such candor
The world would be better to-day.

Our acquaintance, though brief, has been pleasant
And dared I but tell you to-night
Of the pure happy thoughts that are with me
Of the visions so glorious and bright!—

Of a future, so perfect, my darling,
That the angels in heaven above,
Would smile to see me encircled
By the "halo" of your pure love.

Forgive and forget my presumption
Let the "dead past bury its dead."
May God's choicest blessings forever
Rest over my darling's head.

So good night, may your guardian angel
From the glorious world of light
Be with you, forever and ever,
Is the wish of your darling to-night.
