A BEAR STORY.

The hilly country of Cole and Grago counties of Missouri has at one time been a favorite resort for game, and particularly for bears. Not long ago William Hamilton, residing near the Missouri Pacific railroad, went into the timber, about a mile off, to shoot squirrels...

Hamilton could now see no help, and gave up to die, excepting to be kept alive by the bear. But soon a happy thought struck him. That morning he had put some salt in his pocket to salt some cattle he had running in the timber. He took a small handful and sprinkled it in the bear's eyes. It had the desired effect. The bear took his head, growled, and went down. He soon returned, however, but a little more salt drove him away the second time, and to Mr. Hamilton's inexpressible delight, he trotted off into the forest.

That night Mr. Hamilton's sufferings were beyond expression, with one leg fast in the hole in the hole of the tree, the other hanging out, and bleeding, and he not knowing what minute the bear would return and finish his life. He ascribes the preservation of his life to the salt he had in his pocket, and advises everybody, before he goes hunting in Osage county, to fill at least one pocket with salt.

CRUISES ANTI-PATHIES. (From London Society.) The subject of sympathies and antipathies is extremely curious. Boyle fainted when he heard the splashing of water; Scalliger turned pale at the sight of water-cress; Erasmus became feverish when he saw a fish. A curious story is told of a clergyman, that he always fainted when he heard a certain verse in Jeremiah read.
