THE HOME. TAKING IT OUT OF THE FURNITURE.

The little circle met at the house of Mrs. MacGavin. They were having a very good time indeed, sewing with nimble fingers, criticizing the stately parlors, expecting the pleasant tea that was in store for them.

Now, Mrs. MacGavin was the wife of a General, and probably the wealthiest woman in Cairo. Her furniture was certainly superb. The corners were very rich and beautiful, with blue enamel and heavily wrought gilt scroll-work and the curtains were of costly damask.

Well, what do you think of it, Birdie? "I'm afraid I should want to break these vases if I could put my vines in them, they are so hideously gorgeous. I dare say they cost enough, but they are perfectly unmeaning to me, a barbaric mixture of colors. But perhaps I ought not to comment on other people's style of living so freely."

Who is that sweet lady in the gray dress? asked Mrs. General MacGavin. "What perfect good taste she shows in her selection of colors!"

That is Mrs. Gaines, or Birdie Gaines as we call her. She is one of the dearest little women I know, and carries the perfect taste into everything. It's a great pleasure to see her at home; and by the way, I believe our next meeting is at her house."
