Religion and Manners.

Good religion and good manners always go together. They are things that God has joined, and no man can put them asunder. This follows from the nature of religion, which is the love of God and the love of our fellow men. It is a compliance, in some good degree, with the two great commandments of divine law. It is the exercise of proper feelings toward God and a corresponding treatment of Him, and the like toward our neighbor. He who has true religion is a renewed man. Holy love has been shed abroad in his heart by the Holy Spirit. And that love makes him kindly disposed toward all. This the precepts of the gospel require of him. He is to love not only those who love him and to treat them kindly, but he is to love even his enemies, if he has them, and to treat them with kindness. So did the Saviour, who is to be the example of all his disciples.

Religion, having its seat in the heart, is developed in the outward life. It modifies and shapes the conduct. It has upon its possessor a refining influence. It improves his manners. Under its power he becomes more kind and gentle and courteous. Such was its effect upon the great apostle. Before his conversion, he was impetuous and headstrong. He was overbearing, caring little for the interests of others. But religion tamed him. It subdued his natural ferocity and made him lamb-like, To the Thessalonian Christians he thus wrote: "We were gentle among you, even as a nurse cherisheth her children." We find him, in all circumstances, an example of courtesy.

But it may be said that Christians are unmannerly and boorish. They are greatly lacking in kindliness and friendliness. We are constrained to admit that it is so. We are not ourselves strangers to such. But it is nevertheless true, as we said at the outset, that good religion and good manners always go together. There are no exceptions. It is no more true that good religion and dishonesty go together, than it is that good religion and ill manners go together. Those boorish and unmannerly Christians are lacking in good religion. They are greatly deficient here; and that is the reason why they behave no better. Let them increase their religion; let them get more of the genuine article, and they will be improved outwardly in an equal degree as inwardly. There is not a defect or deficiency at which some precept of the gospel does not aim a blow, and which is not rebuked by the example of Him who was "holy, harmless and undefiled." To learn good manners, one does not need to go to school to Lord Chesterfield. He can better learn them in the school of Christ, where he has ever before him perfect rules and a perfect example. —H. S., in Observer.

Bees need fresh water constantly. A supply is easily given by a jar inverted in a saucer and daily replenished. It is but little trouble thus to furnish as many of these watering places as may be needed. They are neat, easily examined, readily replenished, and readily accepted by the bees.

There is no danger of the products of the farmer getting out of fashion. So we can safely keep on producing bread, milk, butter, cheese, pork, beef, mutton, poultry, fruit, potatoes, eggs, etc., without any danger of unfashionable things being left on our hands.—Iowa State Register.

L. S. Hardin says that the Jersey cow, as a rule, will yield from a third to a half more butter in a year than cows of any other breed, and Jersey grades are superior to any other.

The Pool-Betting Sin.

It is reported that John Morrissey has deposited $2,000,000 of pool money in one of the city trust companies. There is probably as much more put into the hands of the other pool managers. It would not be extravagant to say that there are $5,000,009 to-day pending upon the results of the elections in the various States, and this sum is increased hourly by the conflicting stories which come from the doubtful States. If there should be no election, or a dispute as to who is President, the people who have invested it would be deprived of their money for some time to come. Some fine day large sums of money will suddenly disappear from some of the pool rooms, and then people will wonder how keen sporting men were willing to trust their property in the hands of gamblers, while they would not be satisfied to place it in a banking institution unless it was known to be thoroughly solvent. We hear that some of this money is very loosely kept. One night over $100,000 was deposited in the safe of one of the uptown hotels, without receipt or other guarantee than the honesty of a hotel clerk. These sporting people are not business men, and have not business habits. It will be as much the fault of the betting public as the proprietors of the pool rooms if at some time heavy losses are incurred. All this public gambling ought to be prevented by law. There is excitement enough about our elections without having betting so organized that it is a temptation to everybody to "put up" something on the result. As now conducted, pool gambling is even more demoralizing than lotteries.—New York Graphic.

The Hog Supply.

The Kansas City Price Current presents reports from Missouri, Kansas and other parts of the West giving the supply of hogs from which it makes the following deduction:

In looking over these reports we find that in Western Missouri, out, of fifteen counties heard from, ten indicate that the crop will be larger than last year, and four less than last year, and one about the same. As to the effects of cholera, ten report it as having been destructive, one as having experienced no cholera, and four as having done but little damage.

In Kansas out of thirty-seven counties reported, twenty-eight indicate that the crop will be larger than last year, one less and eight about the same. The cholera has been very destructive in three counties, while in five it has been very mild, and in twenty-nine there has been none.

The reports of Southern Nebraska show a uniform gain over last year, and but little cholera.

From Southern Iowa, out of nine counties reported, one shows an increase over last year, six less and two about the same. In six counties the cholera has been destructive, in one none, and in two little damage has been done.

It will thus be seen from these reports, which are as reliable as it is possible to get them from disinterested parties, Kansas, Western Missouri and Southwestern Nebraska show a uniform gain over last year, while a majority of the reports from Southern Iowa show a falling off.

Physiological Effects of Quinia.

Dr. E. L. Drake, of Fayetteville, Tenn., has published in the Medical and Surgical Reporter, some of his experience and conclusions respecting the physiological action of quinia.

He says, at least three different physiological effects can be obtained from this drug. In doses up to two grains it is a tonic; from this to five grains it is a stimulant, and from that to ten grains or more it is a diaphoretic relaxant and calmative—a febrifuge. The amount of twenty-four grains may have some anti-periodic effect in a mild type of ague, but will prove very disagreeable to the patient, on account of cinchonism. If he has any headache it will aggravate this symptom. If this amount be divided into three doses and taken within four hours, at any time after a pyrexia has reached its height, say after 4 p. m., the tonic effect will be apparent in the relaxation and diaphoresis; the patient will be drunk. A half pint of whisky can be taken in small doses during the day without inducing intoxication; yet if it is all taken in the course of two or three hours the individual will be apt to exhibit strong evidence of being in this state. So with chloroform and ether.

I make it a rule never to give quinine in the forenoon, always giving it at night, to the amount of not less than twenty-five grains conjoined with an opiate, and am nearly certain of getting a good diaphoretic effect, which will be apt to extend through the succeeding day. In all the pyrexiæ of this region I prescribe it the first visit, and frequently have the satisfaction of aborting a case of pneumonia, or making its subsequent course manageable. In the pneumonias of the middle-aged, who are so liable to overwhelming congestions of the lungs, it is the sheet-anchor, given in large doses at the outset.

Attention has been called in the daily papers to a practice prevalent in some parts of the country, which appears to illustrate the power possessed by milk of absorbing atmospheric impurities. It is that of placing a saucer of new milk in a larder to preserve meat or game from taint. It is said that not only does it answer that purpose, but that the milk, after a few hours, becomes so bad that no animal will touch it.

A favorite remedy for chapped, cracked or bruised teats in cows is a wash of tar, and, after placing it in an old pail that will not be wanted for anything else, add six or eight quarts of water, and use the wash as often as necessary. It renders the teats soft, and at once heals up all cracks and wounds. One or two applications is generally sufficient for a cure.

Vermin on Fowls.

The Prairie Gazette speaks as follows: "A very important duty of the poultry breeder is to see that his chicks are free from vermin. Sprinkle sulphur continually over the chickens, roost and houses, the latter two occasionally washed with kerosene. If you find the slightest symptoms of the presence of vermin, get rid of them immediately. Sometimes careless breeders will lose setting eggs simply by not occasionally sprinkling the hens and nests with sulphur, or other good insect powder, and the poor hens, unable to stand the dreadful pests, have forsaken their nests. A careful breeder will never allow the scourge of lice among his poultry to trouble him, but will see that he "has none of it."
