A TRUE LOVER OF 1616.

I. They say loving has gone out of fashion, sweetheart; then I am sure that neither you nor I can be in the fashion. For surely, if love be out of fashion, kissing must likewise be; and that was a kiss you gave me when you took me to the park and gave me the sweetest kiss both my mouth and mine will testify. Your lips trembled, sweet, and the tears stood in your eyes, and yet I loved that gentle quivering better far than even the brightest smile you ever gave me, when first I saw you sweetheart, ah, so long ago!

the bare thought fills me with joy; and then a fear follows that these poor words of mine may fall on your hands but yours. I choose the outpourings of my poor heart, but other eyes but yours should read them. "My sacred love is profaned by being laid open to scoffers" is a thought that fills me with dread. The ribbon can find a fast in the holiest of matters, and to have your sweet name made a byword by the careless would wound me keenly. But, of a surety, I shall find some means of sending a few words to you, and perhaps you may hear concerning me from my enemies, who make a loud boast that they have crushed and taken prisoner Montrose and his army. Therefore, sweet, I will only farrow for a few days that I am writing now. Only, Janet, do not flatter yourself with false hopes. There will be no pardon for me. Nor do I desire one. Montrose doomed to die, I could not wish to live.

guards let him gather up. But they, fearing that any delay would incense the populace against them for all were weary of blood, they, urged him on. At which he cried with a loud voice, "Farewell, my Janet!" and walked firmly to the scaffold. When all was over the ladies surrounding the Lady Janet, who had seen her fall forward when her lover pronounced his last farewell, tried to lift her from the seat on the window on which she had sunk. But when they had looked on her fair face they found that the Lord had been merciful to her and had taken her to himself when her lover breathed his last.
