HERE ARE SIX BEAUTIES.

SELECTED FROM THE FLOWER OF NEW YORK'S WOMANKIND.

Florence Finch Kelly Writes of Them and a Number of Others Whose Pictures Are Not Given—Stars of the Professional and Social Firmaments.

The most beautiful woman in New York—that would be a very difficult matter to decide. But there can be no question as to the two who are the most beautiful. Any one with half an eye for beauty would say at once that they are Marion Langdon and Lillian Russell. One, a belle in the most exclusive circle of the selectest society in the United States; the other, a queen of the footlights, famous alike for her beauty, her ability and the frequency and freakiness of her love affairs; one, the inheritor of wealth, position, social prestige—everything that helps to make life beautiful and desirable; the other, the conqueror of everything she has gained—it would be hard to find two women or two lives more utterly diverse than these. And yet, if Paris himself had to bestow the golden apple upon one of the pair he would end his perplexity by flipping a copper, and award his prize according as it came down heads or tails.

And their types of beauty are as different as their lines of life. Miss Langdon is tall and willowy and dark, with big, soulful, dark eyes, and that peculiar patrician kind of features and expression which is seldom seen except as the result of several generations of refined instincts. Miss Russell is compelled to diet rigorously and exercise vigorously in order to keep herself even a little less than stout. She is fair and rosy and jolly, and there is nothing whatever about her eyes, or any other feature, to suggest a soul! There are more expression and vivacity in her face now than she showed a few years ago, and therefore her beauty has been greatly increased. But it is still the beauty of the perfect animal, while Miss Langdon's, far from perfect on the animal side, is changed and intensified by the beauty of a lovely spirit.

Among the young matrons of the Four Hundred, Mrs. Burke Roche is one of the most beautiful. She is said to have begun proceedings for freedom from the unpleasant consequences of an international marriage, and society is anxious to find out about the specific acts of cruelty which she alleges against her English husband as ground for divorce. She is an excellent specimen of the peculiarly American type of beauty—slender and delicate in form and feature and without emphasis in coloring. She has hair of that dreadful "hay color," which is the despair of women who do not know how to manage it and the glory of those who do: soft, light blue eyes, and a clear, pale complexion. Her frame is rather small, but perfect in its proportions and a delight to the eye in its curving outlines. It has no angles, no superfluous flesh, no abrupt curves—it is all gently flowing lines and graceful curves, that melt into one another and leave upon one's mind the impression of harmony and grace. She has three children—Cynthia, aged 6, and a pair of twins, boys, two years younger. Little Miss Cynthia mothers the two youngsters in a most comical way, putting on toward them matronly and protecting airs, which they already begin to resent. The accompanying picture scarcely does Mrs. Burke Roche justice, for it is a recent one, and shows the effects of her trouble in the unusual thinness, and in the rather drawn and sad expression.

Mrs. Cooper Hewitt is Mrs. Burke Roche's sister and is thought by many people to have greater claims to beauty. She is larger, with darker, brighter coloring, and much more life and vivacity. She rides and fences and plays tennis and indulges in all the other fashionable athletic sports, and shows the result of them all in her high vitality and hearty enjoyment of life. They are the daughters of Frank Work, in whose stable, fitted up as a temporary theatre, a little company of young society women played "Camille" a few years ago before a very select audience of ladies alone. Mrs. Hewitt, who was then Miss Work, played Armand with such vigor as to bring down the house and win the delighted admiration of the entire audience.

The very sweetest face in all New York, as every one who studies this picture will certainly agree, is that of Mrs. David Thomson, born Miss Purdy. It has all the beauty of refined, harmonious features and of a sweet and gentle expression, but it lacks a little in complexion and coloring, of all that a very beautiful face must have.

Somebody wise in this world's follies has said that if a woman has a beautiful skin it will profit her more than brains, or wealth, or position, or physical endowment of any other kind, and there is at least one woman in New York who can look in her mirror and know that for once a cynical philosopher spoke the truth. She is Mrs. George Gould. She has a beautiful chin, and she has achieved that in this world's graces and rewards which she never could have gained if nature had spoiled her face by making that member prominent and peaked, or insignificant and retreating. It is a very sweet, intelligent and attractive face which she has, in addition to its being merely beautiful. But she is losing the beauty which was so rare and delicate during her stage life, and which caused the eyes of George Gould to rest with delight upon Edith Kingdon's face the first time he saw her. Her eyes are as large and dark and soft, her hair as luxuriant, as silky and as brown, and her features as delicate as ever, but since the two Gould cherubs invaded the Gould household her complexion has lost its clearness, her eyes some of their brightness, and her form its delicate outlines.

Her grace the Duchess of Marlborough was one of the most beautiful women in New York. And if one night make a major premise of the disposition and character of the head of the house of Marlborough, and a minor premise of the duchess' traits of character which shine forth in this picture, the only logical conclusion to which one can come is that she will be a New Yorker again before many more years.

New York is divided upon the question of whether or not Marion Manola is a beautiful woman. She has enthusiastic admirers who rave over her eyes and her hair and her figure and expression. And there are others who say she has freckles, and therefore can't be beautiful. She has luxuriant hair of the dark, red-brown color that is giving a new impetus to the manufacture of chemicals—but hers is so by grace of nature and not by force of dye—and her eyes are big and brown, soulful and far away. She is a little woman, with a stovepipe waist that would have made Venus' eyes pop out of her head with wonder, a wicked little curl in her lips and a devil-may-care expression lurking in the corners of her eyes. These just have contributed immensely to her success on the stage. She has a little daughter, Nora, of whom she is very fond and proud, and who is herself over again, as nearly as it is possible for a little bundle to look like a large one.

Miss Schreiner is one of those few people who had not the good fortune to be born beautiful, and who has not had the enterprise to achieve beauty—as some of the wise ones are saying it can be achieved—but who, nevertheless, is having beauty thrust upon her with a success equal to the real estate boom of a western town. She has brown hair, gray-brown eys, features rather pleasing, mainly because she looks good natured and amiable, and a fairly good, fresh complexion. A certain rich man who admires Miss

MARION MANOLA.

Schreiner immensely, and thinks her wonderfully good, clever and beautiful, is proving his devotion, not in any such vulgar and commonplace way as laying his wealth at her feet, but by systematically building up for her a reputation as a stunning beauty.

In Journalism.

"And what has become of your son Jimmie?"

"Jimmie's gone into journalism."

"Why, he is only ten years old."

See-Saw.

An artist went to sea to see
What he might see at sea to draw,
He only saw what all may see—
The sea was all the artist saw.

And when he saw he'd seen the sea,
Proceeded he the scene to draw.
And since his scene I often see
I've seen the sea the artist saw.

"Puzzled The Doctors."

MOST of the cases cured by Ayer's Sarsaparilla have been given up by the regular practice. Physicians are recommending this medicine more than ever, and with satisfactory results.

E. M. Sargent, Lowell, Mass., says:—"Several years ago, my daughter broke out with large sores on her hands, face, and other parts of her body. The case puzzled the doctors. My daughter used Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and it resulted in a complete cure. Her blood seems to have been thoroughly purified, as she has never had so much as a pimple since taking this medicine."

"This is to certify that after having been sick for twelve years with kidney disease and general debility, and having been treated by several physicians without relief, I am now better in every respect, and think I am nearly well, having taken seven bottles of Ayer's Sarsaparilla."—Maria Ludwigson, Albert Lea, Minn.

BEERBOHM TREE.

He Is Known as the Coquelin of the British Stage.

LONDON'S FAVORITE COMEDIAN.

His Wonderful Gift of Mimicry—He Literally Woke Up One Morning and Found Himself Famous—A Remarkable Success in the "Private Secretary."

It is said that Herbert Beerbohm Tree is the favorite comedian of fickle London. His real name is Herbert Beerbohm, the "Tree," his stage name, being derived from the Dutch meaning of Beerbohm. Almost from babyhood he evinced an extraordinary gift of mimicry and often amused his school fellows and got himself into trouble, by imitating the masters. Some time after he left college he proved that he was of good business ability, for he took charge of a part of his father's enterprise, The Evening Corn Trade List, and for eight years worked profitably at it.

But his talent as an actor could not be suppressed, and, wearying somewhat of the dull grind of business, he determined to enlist in the army of amateur actors. In a letter to The San Francisco Chronicle Constance Beerbohm says that his success was so brilliant all over London, not only in private houses but in public, that his friends induced him to turn his back to business and adopt the stage as a profession. He played more than one hundred parts, to the great satisfaction of the public; but it was his Private Secretary that won him recognition as the leading comedian of the day.

It is said that there were scarcely more than six funny lines in the part of the Rev. Robert Spalding in the original piece, and that Tree made all the humor himself. When he appeared on the stage with his innocent blue eyes tear laden and gazing upward, his fair auburn hair smoothly brushed and parted in the middle, wearing a shovel hat and long coat of priestly cut, and carrying under his arm a bandbox full of oranges and a soda water bottle of milk, his appearance was indescribably comic and always provoked a roar of laughter.

BEERBOHM TREE.

He finally decided to give up the role, however, as he considered it too clownish. He next appeared in a dramatized version of Hugh Conway's "Called Back" as a villain, showing remarkable power. His "Pompadour" was the theatrical event of the London season.

Tree is most accomplished in the, to the actor, very valuable art of "making up." A clever draughtsmen, he is able with a few lines from his brush to transform his face into the likeness of any man he knows; and when, while playing the part of an artist, he felt desirous to resemble Sir Frederick Leighton, the president of the English Royal academy, with the aid of a few touches of black and blue he was metamorphosed into the very counterfeit presentment of that illustrious personage. As the old Russian prince in "Nadjesda" his make up was a veritable marvel, every wrinkle and every shadow in the face indicated with such exquisite skill that it was not possible even when standing quite near him to detect the art concealed by art. In the "Red Lamp" and again in "Partners" his cunning disguises may fairly be called masterpieces of painter's as well as actor's craft.

In his wife the eminent actor has been particularly fortunate. It was once said of Mrs. Langtry that in her earliest youth she was not so beautiful as when she neared the age of 30—for that until then she had not learned "how to be beautiful." Mrs. Tree accomplishes even more than Mrs. Langtry, for at a much earlier stage of her career she has caught the knack of always looking the most attractive woman in whatever room she may be, and this without possessing features of absolute regularity. She is an excellent Latin and Greek scholar, a clever mathematician and a really brilliant conversationalist. As an actress she has frequently distinguished herself, one of her finest efforts being made in a play given at the Cromwell house—"The Tale of Troy"—in which she spoke her lines in Greek with such charming effect that the then prime minister, Mr. Gladstone, himself an ardent Greek scholar, craved for an introduction and complimented her in the warmest terms.

A Coming Man.

Collins—Hello, there goes Dulcy. There's a coming man for you.

Boye—What makes you think that?

Collins—Oh, his general appearance and make up.

Boye—Sorry I can't agree with you.

Collins—Then I'll prove that he's a coming man. (Shouting to Dulcy), "Have a drink, old fellow."

The way that he responded left no doubt in Boye's mind. In fact, he was too coming to be becoming.—Kearney Enterprise.

People's Five Year Benefit Order.

A regular meeting of the Imperial commandery, being the second since it was instituted, was held recently. Several important matters were discussed, changes made in the constitution and officers elected. The general feeling was one of gratification at the able manner in which the affairs had been conducted and the general success of the order.

There are very nearly 7,000 members, and there has been no lessening of the steady growth.

Handsomely bound in flexible back, a convenient size to carry in the pocket. Endorsed by attorneys everywhere. The following are a few of the many testimonials:

The following strong endorsement from Capt. John E. Ash, ex-judge of the 30th Judicial District, state of Indiana. He writes as follows:

WICHITA, Kans., Oct. 26, 1889.

It is the most complete and concise work of the sort I have ever met with. I cannot see how the systematic, practicing lawyer can do without it. It should be entitled "The Lawyer's Vade Mecum."

Truly and sincerely Yours,
JOHN H. ASH, Att'y at Law.

ARKANSAS CITY, Kan., Aug. 10, '89.

The Attorneys' Pocket Docket was received all right and will say that it is the most complete and convenient article that a lawyer can have in his office to facilitate business. It is just what every lawyer needs that has any business in court.
