AN AWFUL BORE.

One of the Wonders of the World According to the Chinese.

Some time in October, writes Mr. G. W. Ward, a Black and White war correspondent, one of the wonders of the world, according to Chinese ideas, is visible on the eastern coast of the province of Chekiang, some 40 miles south of Shanghai. Twice a year—at each equinox—the famous tides of the Tsiens Tang river, that flows from the borders of Kiangsi, Fukien and Chekiang to Hang-chow bay, attain their greatest height; and a bore of sometimes over 40 feet in height sweeps irresistibly up its shallow and funnel-shaped estuary, often producing tremendous havoc to the surrounding country—hence its name: "money dyke," from the amount expended in successive centuries on its embankments. It is seen at its best at Hang-chow, the prefectural city not far from its mouth. Twelve or fourteen minutes before it is visible a dull, distant roar is heard, momentarily swelling, until the wall of muddy water, tall as the bulwarks of the biggest liner, as overwhelming as a glacier, sweeps into sight round the bend a mile away. Not a boat is to be seen on the lately-crowded river; all are hauled up on to the huge embankment, and moored fore and aft with a dozen rattan cables, for none but ocean-going steamers could stem the current, and even they would need skillful navigation. As the eager nears, the roar becomes deafening as a storm at sea, drowning the excited shouts of the thousands who line the walls, until finally it foams past in turbid majesty, hurrying toward the heart of China. The Celestials have tried to deal with it in every way, human and super human. Their annals tell how, a thousand years ago, Prince Wu Shu made 500 "daring" archers shoot half a dozen arrows each at the advancing flood, and then, after praying to Wu Tsz-si (the tutelary deity of the stream, and originally an upright minister, whose body was cast into the river after Wu had committed suicide), put the key of the dyke water gate into an envelope, and threw it into the stream, whereupon the waters retired! But as by that time they would have flowed back in any case, even the Chinese did not regard the experiment as very miraculous. A couple of hundred years later Emperor Kan Tsung had ten iron plates, each weighing about 150 pounds, sunk in the river by way of propitiating the spirits, but the water promptly carried away both charms and embankments. These legends, however, hardly seem worthy of a Chinese romancer, and a really powerful legend, worthy of this most awful bore on record, has yet to be written. Only last century a Hang-chow tea merchant leapt into the river, like another Marcus Curtius, to avert the annual disaster.

A great historic name has become extinct in France with the death of Maurice Cesar, prince de la Tour d'Auvergne, duc de Bouillon, the last of his race, in his 87th year.

The family could trace an undisputed descent back to the thirteenth century, and asserted that it sprang from Godfrey of Bouillon, king of Jerusalem. Its principality of Sedan was the last feudal sovereign state in France to be surrendered to the crown. Marshal Turenne was a member of the family.

The prince's father was a general of Napoleon. The story is told of him that he seized the bridle of the emperor's horse in the Champs Elysees one day and asked him for a commission.

"How old are you?" asked Napoleon.

"Sixteen," was the answer.

"What is your name?"

"Godefroi de la Tour d'Auvergne."

"These are the men I need," said the emperor, and he gave him a lieutenancy.—N. Y. Sun.

Dresden Table Effects.
