POULTRY FACTS

POPULAR BREEDS FOR MEAT

Brahmas, Cochins and Langshans Are Named as Being Among Best All-Around Heavyweights.

The best all-around heavy weight fowl for the production of large broilers and medium and heavy roasters and capons is the Brahma. The Cochins and Langshans are also excellent meat breeds. The Light Brahma has been the most popular, but the Dark Brahma at its best is fully as good. Both can be bred with the greatest amount of breast meat, because they have naturally long breasts with great width between the thighs.

These qualities can be improved by carefully selecting breeding stock, using only hens that are of heavy weight, with great length of body, considerable width between the thighs and long breast bones. The males used should be cockerels of the same type, but with a little more length of leg.

Both males and females should be close feathered, with scant hock, leg and toe feathering. Brahmals of this type were great favorites a few years ago for market poultry. They were partly lost sight of for some time, but are again being bred to some extent in the poultry districts of New England.

TIME FOR PROPER HATCHING

Character of Range Must Be Considered—Confined Fowls Do Not Develop Very Rapidly.

Growing chicks that have, during the summer, been provided with an abundance of range, shade and green food will grow much more rapidly and more evenly than those crowded into small bare yards. The character of the range must, therefore, be considered in deciding on the time for proper hatching.

If the chicks are hatched too early they are apt to go into a fall molt after laying a few eggs in the summer, and are not likely to resume laying again until well into the winter, or after one or more of the most profitable laying months have passed. On the other hand, they should be hatched early enough to allow a sufficient time for normal maturity before the coming of cold weather in the fall.

PRACTICAL EGG-CASE FILLER

Much Loss Caused by Breakage Where Too Much Space Is Allowed—Defect Is Overcome.

It is said that the breakage is from 3 to 9 per cent when eggs are packed in the ordinary fillers, because too much space is allowed for each egg and the partitions are insufficiently elastic. In this scheme the flat sheets separating the layers are slit so that under the center of each egg compartment there is a series of radiating tongues, long enough to yield under ordinary shock, but stiff enough to remain in substantially the same plane. In the right-hand figure we show three different ways of making the slits.—Independent Farmer.

Keep Complete Records.
Keep a record of your flock the year round. It is the only way to find how much money they are earning. Charge yourself a reasonable price for all the eggs you use.

Don't Mix.
Poultry of different ages and breeds. Eggs of different sizes, ages and colors.

Mating of Geese.
A mating of geese can be continued for seven or eight years without a change.

When Pullets Lay.
As a usual thing chickens do not lay until they are ten or twelve months old.
