Report Shows Increase of 37 Per Cent Over Two Years Ago.
The general level of farm prices has risen during the last year although the price of meat animals has decreased, according to a statement given out this morning by E. A. Logan, Missouri agricultural statistician.
The condition of all crops in Missouri was 101 per cent July 1 compared to the ten-year average at this time of year. Dr. Pickard Will Continue Lectures On Skelton Collections.
"You can't make a mill-wheel and paint a mill-wheel alike; there is a big difference between the carpenter's and the painter's viewpoint," said Dr. John Pickard in a lecture Thursday night in the faculty room of the Library Building. He illustrated the growth of American landscape painting from its early emphasis on microscopic detail to its later growth towards a bigger and more powerful conception of the whole.
Many of Dr. Pickard's hearers were persons outside his classes. He will continue the course of lectures on the work of other artists in the Skelton collection.

FLORER GARDENS NOW PRE-EMPT BACK YARDS

Queen Anne fronts and Mary Anne backs are not tolerated by the real home makers and home lovers of Columbia. It used to be considered sufficiently complimentary to describe a woman as a good housekeeper. Now a home maker is more than a housekeeper. She gives much thought and energy to her lawn and her garden.
Mrs. James Gordon, 1211 University avenue, is an impartial lover of flowers. There is room in her heart and her garden for the most flamboyant and for the meanest flower that blows. She has fifty kinds of iris, seventy peonies, hundreds of tulips, asters, zenias, verbenas, phlox, lemon lilies, delphiniums, coreopsis and a host of other flowers of both proud and modest dispositions. She specializes in dahlias. Surely the wrens in the little bird-house high over the garden sing sweeter songs for the glory that lies below.
Mrs. J. C. Babb, 812 Virginia avenue, uses violets and pansies as borders for her flower beds. The plot of day lilies under the shade of an apple tree in the heart of the garden, lemon lilies, and a rose bower give distinction to her garden.
The poppy bed of Mrs. R. J. Booth on Hitt street cheered all Columbians who fortunately passed that way in June. It was a mass of color tumbled about by bees that fumbled deep in the poppy cups full of sun-steeped opiates. The silky petals flamed and blazed audaciously.
At a national real-estate convention held recently at the Hotel Muehlebach, Kansas City, a topic much discussed was the increasing importance attached to the "garden side of the house". The garden now occupies the position of the old back yard. The style of architecture of homes is regulated largely by the style of lawns and gardens. Homes are now coming themselves sideways in Charleston fashion where the triple-gallied porches overlook private seas of bloom.

Columbia women not only exchange ideas at their Garden Club meetings. They also exchange flower seeds and bulbs. It is their wish that the money awarded as prizes be used to purchase seeds and bulbs. Columbia gardeners see visions of a more beautiful Columbia as they strain and toil over their work.
As Rudyard Kipling said in his poem, "The Glory of the Garden", "Half a proper gardener's work is done upon his knees."
