JAPAN'S SACRED DANCE.

A Picturesque Ceremony Conducted by Young Priestesses. From Kasuga gate the upper avenue of lanterns leads the way to the Wakamiya shrine, dedicated to the early gods of the Shinto religion. Here the old custom of the sacred dance is kept up, and a group of young priestesses are waiting to repeat the measures danced by Uzume before the sun goddess' cave in prehistoric times. The little priestesses are all between the ages of nine and twelve, as timid, gentle and harmless little things as the deer that often stray in and watch them. Their dresses are the old, old costume of the imperial court, a picturesque lower garment or divided skirt of the brightest cardinal red silk, that half covers the white kimono, with square sleeves and pointed neck, filled up high with alternate folds of red and white. When they dance they wear over these loose kimonos of white gauze, painted with the wistaria crest of the Kasuga temple, the front of the gauzy garment half covering the red skirt, and the back pieces trailing on the mats. Their faces are plastered so thickly with white paint that they lose all expression, and, following the old fashion, their eyebrows are shaved and two tiny black dots high up in the middle of their foreheads take their place. With lips heavily rouged the countenance is more a mask than any thing human. The hair is gathered together at the back of the neck and tied with loops of gold paper, and then folded in soft white paper, allowed to hang down the back. Long hair-pins, with clusters of wistaria and red camellia, are thrust across the top of the head, and fastened so that they stand out like horns over the forehead. In detail the costume is not pretty, but in its general effect it is singularly bright and picturesque. One can have as many priestesses and as long a dance as he will pay for, and as soon as the money is handed over the two priests get into their ceremonial white gowns and high black hats and, sitting before the ancient drums, chant, pound and blow on doleful pipes an accompaniment for the little dancers. The sacred dance is solemn enough, and each dancer has a fan and a bunch of bells, from which hang long strips of bright-colored silks. They advance, retreat, glide to right and left, raise their fans, shake their sacred baby rattles, and with few changes in the measure repeat the same figures and movements for a certain length of time. If one pays more money they continue repeating the same thing, and the priests can wait the endless accompaniment by the hour. To us the dance is simply a curious and picturesque custom, but one should see the faces of the devout old pilgrims, who have hoarded up their money for months and often years for the trip, to know something of what it means to them. It is really pathetic to see their faces glowing and their eyes almost filled with tears at their satisfaction with the fine spectacle that is so rare an event in their lives, and which crowns their summer pilgrimage to the old shrines of their faith.—Cor. St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Where the Sun Does Not Set.

A scene witnessed by some travelers in the north of Norway from a cliff one thousand feet above the sea is thus described: "The ocean swept away in silent vastness at our feet; the sound of waves scarcely reached our airy lookout; away in the north the huge old sun swung low along the horizon, like the slow beat of the pendulum in the tall clock of our grandfather's corner. We all stood silent, looking at our watches. When both hands came together at twelve, midnight, the full round orb hung triumphantly above the waves, a bridge of gold running due north, spanning the water between us and him. There he shone in silent majesty which knew no setting. We involuntarily took off our hats; no word was said. Combine, if you can, the most brilliant sunrise and sunset you ever saw, and the beauties will pale before the gorgeous coloring which now lit up ocean, heaven and mountain. In half an hour the sun swung perceptibly on his beat, the colors changed to those of morning, a fresh breeze rippled over the floor, one songster after another piped up in the grove behind us—we had slid into another day."

"You don't know, Jehones," said his editorial visitor, "what the temptations are that assail the political journalist. Publishing your modest little society paper, as you do, you have to deal with a constituency unlike mine in every respect. Your manhood is not assailed. No attempt is made to buy you openly. You, my friend, have never been approached by any political emissary who wanted to purchase the support of your paper outright for $500 to $1,000, or some such paltry sum." "Never!" replied Jehones, with a wistful, yearning look.—Chicago Tribune.

DON'T

let that cold of yours run on. You think it is a light thing. But it may run into catarrh. Or into pneumonia. Or into consumption. Catarrh is disgusting. Consumption is death itself. The breathing apparatus must be kept healthy and clear of all obstructions and offensive matter. Otherwise there is trouble ahead. All the diseases of these parts, head, nose, throat, bronchial tubes and lungs, can be delightfully and entirely cured by the use of Boschee's German Syrup. If you don't know this already, thousands and thousands of people can tell you. They have been cured by it and "know how it is themselves." Bottle only 75 cents. Ask any druggist. 4-1 vt c o w.

Wallets for School-Girls.

"The German doctors," says the St. James' Gazette, "profess to have discovered a new danger. They assert that the custom of carrying portfolios to school has a tendency to distort the figures of young girls between the ages of eleven and fourteen. Parents are exhorted to provide wallets for their young daughters, which can be carried like knapsacks on the back. In many parts of Germany this equipment is already in use; and to the unaccustomed eye of the stranger nothing is more comical than suddenly to come upon a crowd of little girls trooping out of school, each provided with a knapsack for the march. The next funniest thing to be seen among school-children on the continent is the long pipe or the bilious cigarette of the diminutive Dutch boy."

Drunkenness of the Liquor Habit

Positively Cured by administering Dr. Haines' Golden Specific. It can be given in a cup of coffee or tea without the knowledge of the person taking it; is absolutely harmless and will effect a permanent and speedy cure, whether the patient is a moderate drinker or an alcoholic wreck. Thousands of drunkards have been made temperate men who have taken Golden Specific in their coffee without their knowledge, and to-day believe they quit drinking of their own free will. It never fails. The system once impregnated with the Specific it becomes an utter impossibility for the liquor appetite to exist. For full particulars, address GOLDEN SPECIFIC CO., 185 Race St. Cincinnati.

YELLOW FEVER THEORY.

The Disease Travels Only in Sun-Light and Forty Feet a Day.

"People are always discovering something known before they were born," growled a Harlem refugee who has spent some time in the South. "Here's a newspaper that says 'the novel theory that the yellow-fever microbe travels only when the sun is shining is advanced in a letter from General F. E. Spinner.' Why, that's as old as yellow fever itself, I really believe. I was shooting ducks in Florida in the winter of 1877-78, when the fever broke out in Jacksonville. It was necessary for us to sail up there, twenty miles, to get supplies. Among our number (it was a Louisianaian, who proposed to sail to Jacksonville. He was asked anxiously if there was not danger of the unacclimated members of the necessary crew of four catching the fever.

"Not the least," he said calmly. "We'll start in the night, and if we get there before sun-up, as we shall if the wind serves as it does now, we'll lie off in the river until eight o'clock. But we must get through our business by four o'clock.

"It is a well-known fact," he explained, answering inquiries, "that there is not the slightest danger of infection unless you remain in the infected town during the night. Then, too, the disease travels in circles about each center of infection at the rate of about forty feet a day, and outside of these circles one is perfectly safe. I learned all that while I was a boy."

"Well, we went to Jacksonville," said the New Yorker, "got our supplies and our dinner and some other things I need not schedule, and sailed at half-past four. Near where we were staying was a town which maintained a shot-gun quarantine, but the St. John's is nearly five miles wide there and we slipped by. Ten days after that we went up there and tantalized them about our trip to Jacksonville. Mad? Why, they wanted to look us up! But we went to Jacksonville several times after that.

"How about that forty feet a day progression? O, I don't know about that, but the other business held good."—N. Y. Telegram.

Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this receipt, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. THE USEFUL SKUNK.

Why Farmers Make a Mistake in Destroying the Little Animal.

The much despised skunk is a good entomologist, and the farmer and gardener make a great mistake in persecuting and destroying this humble little animal. The few eggs he purloins from the farmer's hen yard very poorly compensate for the great number of noxious insects he destroys. In May, he is sometimes seen about sundown, on some elevated spot, watching for the May beetle as he wheels his droning flight, and he saves him, not in the sense spoken of in the immortal elegy, but between his teeth. He will sit an hour at a time gathering in the destructive beetles. He is a persistent hunter, and in his nocturnal rambles moves along with nose close to the ground; his sense of smell is so acute not an insect, not a larva, above ground or below, can escape him; his eyes now glow with unusual brilliancy as he scans every leaf and branch for the hidden prey. About tobacco plantations his services are considered valuable. Several years ago tobacco was cultivated to some extent in the adjoining town of Brighton. The writer, wishing to get some of the worms to rear moths from, called on a gentleman owning a plantation in the town, and made known his object. The reply was, "Take all you can find; we want to get rid of them." In going through the rows I noticed many holes in the in the ground, five or six inches deep, but could not make out the object, as they did not seem to have any thing to do with the tobacco. I mentioned the fact to the gentleman, who smiled as he told me that it was done by skunks to obtain the tobacco worms that had left the plants and buried themselves to undergo their transformations, but were forestalled by the keen-scented animal and made to serve as food.—Vick's Magazine.

The latest instance of economy is that of a Boston man who declined to buy a compass to take into the Maine woods. He said that he was a singer, and could save expense by using the compass of his voice.—Burlington Free Press.
