Many Persons Are Going Away for the End of the Summer, Though It Is Not at Resorts.

Society Develops "Away Fever."

Religious Camp Meetings Have Become Popular at Many Fashionable Places This Season.

The "away fever" is the latest epidemic with which the people of St. Louis are afflicted. It is very contagious, and the fever increases, though St. Louis has had summer-resort weather. The only cure is a new summer wardrobe, and a prescription signed by one of the general passenger agents. Everyone in St. Louis has either had, or is going to have, or is longing to have, the "away fever."

"She has gone away for the summer." "She is going away." "Have you been away?" "I have been away" is all that one hears in the street cars, on the street, in the shops or in the homes. If one calls up their nearest friends, the telephone girls give out the information. "Away for the summer."

The society reporters of the summer resorts, both Eastern and Northern, send in many names of St. Louis persons who have "just arrived." If the "away fever" epidemic continues I think I will have to catch it and go away so that I may have something and someone to write about.

However, all the reports show that it has been frightfully hot at all the summer resorts, where they give a written guarantee to deliver bottled cold air free of charge during the season.

I notice that the society folk at many of the summer resorts have become deeply religious this season, and instead of attending balls, lawn parties and pink teas are regular attendants at the "camp meetings."

One of the cleverest society girls in St. Louis, who has been summering at Ocean Grove, wrote the following to a friend:

"The Grove has settled down to thoroughgoing religious work. Religion and nothing but religion is now supposed to find place within the jurisdiction of the 'camp season.' The Grove is for churchgoing, and for churchgoing there is ample opportunity. Bishop John N. FitzGerald and the 'camp fathers' have arranged services from sunrise until late evening.

"At 5:30 a. m. the first service is held, which is followed by the Family service at the Auditorium later. Then breakfast, which is followed by service at 9 o'clock by the holiness, young people's and helping-hand meetings, which are followed by the regular public worship in the Auditorium. Another meeting at 1:30 p. m. ends in time for the 2 o'clock mothers' meeting. The night service precedes a sermon, which is followed by an after-meeting, when the exhorters draw the gospel net. The interest in the services is great and the people are full of religious fervor.

"Out in Colorado religious waves have been many and high this summer. The last was a delegation of 40 members of the Christian Church, who held mass meetings in Colorado Springs.

"It seems, too, that society in Asbury Park is slightly agitated over the 'dot.' Bishop FitzGerald urges the ladies to take a hand in fighting the 'dot.'"

Quite a colony of St. Louis people is summering at Waupaca, Wis., and are very prominent in the social life of that place.

Mrs. C. W. Ferguson of Webster Groves, who is spending the summer at Waupaca, entertained a party of young people from Wilmerding Inn last Monday evening at cottage H, Grand View.

Canoe trips down the Waupaca through the Chain o' Lakes and Crystal River, a distance of about thirty miles, are very popular with the younger set. A St. Louis party composed of the Misses Gladys Blackmer and Julia Skinner and Messrs. Baker Fullerton and Percy Blackmer made this trip.

The latest additions to the St. Louis colony are: Robert T. Britton, Roy F. Britton, C. L. Robinson, R. W. Fullerton, Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Curtis, James E. Schumate and George T. Terry.

Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Hutting, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Wirth and Mr. and Mrs. L. B. Valliant are at Poland Springs, Mass.

Pretty summer girls don't borrow.

That does not mean eggs over the back fence, nor yet a "bobbin" when you must run some ribbon through an fresh lingerie and can't find your own silver one which somebody gave to you last Christmas.

It means don't borrow from your men friends, and then forget to return the articles.

Not long ago I met a young man whose quiet yet tasteful methods of dress always give him a distinguished air. His linen is neat and stylish, without being loud, his clothes of the best material and cut, and the little jewelry that he wears is always so carefully chosen.

"Where's that very good-looking scarf-pin you used to wear?" I inquired, noting its absence from his plain, dark-blue four-in-hand.

He looked just a bit annoyed. "Girl borrowed it about a month ago," he said laconically. "Expect it's gone for good, too, as she said it was the prettiest one she'd seen this summer."

"Ridiculous!" I exclaimed. "Do you mean to tell me that you will let that pin go without making an effort to get it back? Why, you are not the sensible man I take you to be."

"And lose the friendship of the young woman? You don't know what you are talking about. If I were to suggest even very faintly that Marie had forgotten to return my pin, with emphasis on the 'my,' she'd be angry in a minute and tell every girl she knows what a stingy, downright, mean curmudgeon I am. No, sirree, I don't go running my head into the noose if I can help it. Had too much experience along that line. I tell you, if a fellow lets a girl wear his things and sometimes he can't help it, as the other night, when Marie hadn't anything to pin her coat together as we were motoring and it turned cool, he might just as well say good-by to them, for the average girl never even suggests that he might want them again."

Now I happen to know that the aforesaid scarf-pin in question was one particularly valued by the man, for it came as an usher present when he went down to Nashville last winter to assist at some chum's wedding. It was of special design, as such things usually are, and besides the intrinsic value, which was considerable, possessed the added pleasure of being a souvenir of a very joyful occasion. And because it was so handsome and so stylish and had all this pleasant association Miss Marie must needs ask for it under a pretense, and then—forget to give it back.

This man likes Marie very well, indeed, too well, I'm thinking, for he evidently does not want to incur her displeasure by asking her to return his pin, as, under the circumstances, he is certainly entitled to do. If she gets angry, well and good—she and all the other Maries like her. They don't, any of them, deserve either pins or nice men friends.

Miss Knobloch was Doctor Lewald's primembered in St. Louis since the Fair, has been writing some news about herself to friends of late.

Miss Knobloch was Doctor Lewald's private secretary, and one of the most interesting women—indeed, Mr. Ernst Filsinger declares in emphatic syllables, the "most interesting woman, young or old"—who came from a foreign country and identified herself with the Fair.

Miss Knobloch's home is in Hamburg, where she lives with a large family—several sisters, each one of whom has been carefully trained in some particular profession. One is a painter, another an inspector of the schools in Hamburg, one a skilled craftswoman in metal and wood, and Bertha, the youngest, chose a business career for herself, learning all the branches of business by going into her father's offices at an age when most girls are thinking of little novels and chocolate creams.

When the Fair was projected she obtained her parents' consent to come over and visit some New York relatives, saying nothing about a more independent step. On her arrival she soon met some German acquaintances who were familiar with the advance work of the German Commission. Doctor Lewald was then in the East and was hunting far and wide for a proficient secretary, one who might know German perfectly and German stenography as well, something far more intricate than our own shorthand; French, some Russian and as many more languages, including English, as possible, in addition to a perfect understanding of all business methods connected with the office of secretary.

He preferred a man, did the doctor, but chancing to meet Miss Knobloch socially one night at the Waldorf, they became good friends and the very instant that the doctor aired his woes and said in pathetic voice that he quite despaired of ever being able to find the right kind of secretary, she resolved to offer her services. She took her relatives into counsel and finally overcame their opposition and in the end came to St. Louis and established headquarters at the Lindell boulevard house which the commission occupied. And, with such success as all who met the young woman, could only envy and admire.

Miss Knobloch went home last February after her duties for the Germans were ended, but she had made so many business friends, who were astonished at her marked ability, combined with her exceptional talents and interesting personality, that she had scarcely reached Hamburg before she had several cables to return. She has accepted one offer, from a New York business men of great wealth, and will attend to his foreign affairs the coming winter. Before beginning her work she probably will visit St. Louis and Cincinnati, where she had many friends, reaching this section of the country early in the fall.

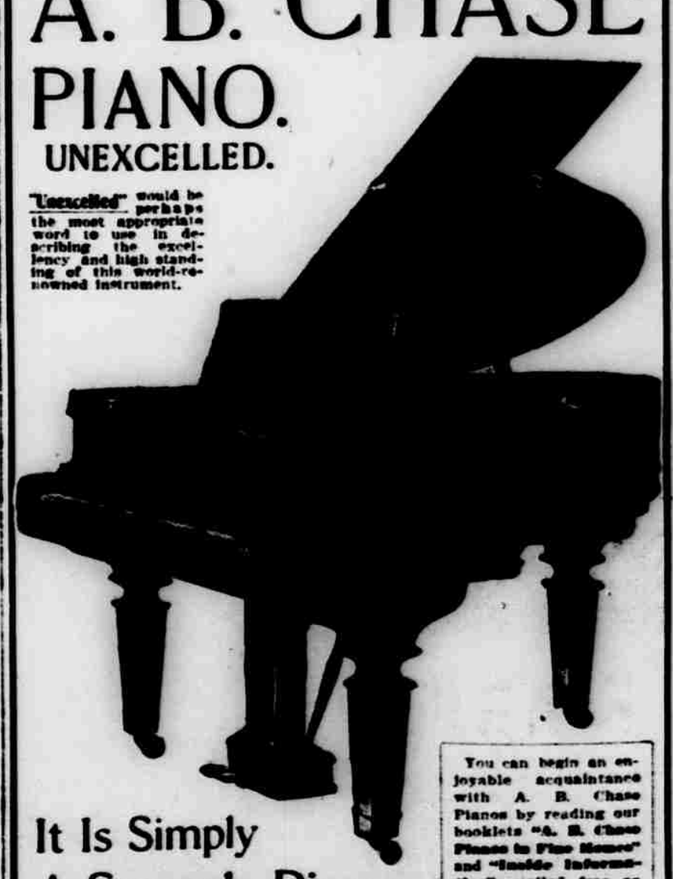
"The Highest State of Perfection."

THE A. B. CHASE PIANO. UNEXCELLED.

"Unexcelled" would be perhaps the most appropriate word to use in describing the excellency and high standing of this world-renowned instrument.



It Is Simply A Superb Piano.

You can begin an enjoyable acquaintance with A. B. Chase Pianos by reading our booklets "A. B. Chase Pianos in Fine Homes" and "Inside Information"—mailed free on request.

On all sides praises resound—as to its exceeding fine quality of tone, perfection in action and great durability.

One of its greatest indorsements is the fact that in St. Louis alone over sixty of these pianos are used in the studios of the most prominent musicians.
