

Town and County.

ADVICE TO GIRLS.

Pretty maid, if you discover That your ardent, pleading lover Spends his time in looting idly round town;
If his hair is carried hangy
On his forehead, and he's slangy, Don't you hesitate a moment—turn him
down!

If you note his eyebrows fusing Over the nose that he is using,
And the very least annoyance makes him frown,
He has got a disposition That may land you in perdition, And you'd better nerve yourself and turn him
down.

If he pays no marked attention Doesn't even give it mention, When you meet him in a new and charming gown,
Show him to the door politely, Tell him that his Sunday night Visits must be discontinued—
turn him
down.

If he talks about the races, Calls the silver dollars "beans," Tells you how he "done up" Smith, Jones and Brown
In a little game of poker
By a sleeve play with the "joker," Show him quickly to the door and turn him
down.

If his breath should of an savor
Of a cigaretteish flavor, And his fingers with the ugly stains are brown,
If he meets you with a swagger
And you catch a sniff of lager, Get your nerve in proper trim and turn him
down.

Study well your pleading lover Or you may too late discover That he'll place more thorns than roses in your crown,
And if anything about him Gives you cause to doubt him, Do it in a gentle way, but turn him
down.

To Make the Farm a Success.

One of the many subjects to which the Southern Farmers should give more attention and should more carefully consider than they have done in the past, is that of growing more meat for market and home use. No well directed place should ever want for a fat pig to slaughter as the occasion may demand any time through the year. By selecting some good strain of hogs, the Poland China, for instance, and not many of them, and giving them the proper care as they grow, a large percentage of all the pork and bacon needed on the farm can be easily produced, and a big saving would thus be effected in the farmer's earnings by the end of the year.

A few hogs may be kept on a grass plot of one acre of land, and with a little time and trouble they may be kept clean and in a healthy growing condition.
Swine should be fed regularly and be constantly supplied with good water. Shed should be built to shield them from heat and cold. Cleanliness should always be given careful attention.

Feeding to get the best results out of the hog in pure, sweet meat, requires much care to see that the feeding is regularly done and not wastefully, but simply enough food supplied at each feeding to keep the pigs growing and in good flesh from start to finish. It is a good idea to have a barrel filled with water near the feeding pen, into which corn in the ear may be put to soak and soften before it is fed. Cooked potatoes, of either sort, to which some corn meal may be added, will, when fed every other day, be very much relished by growing pigs. Such roots as turnips, and sweet potatoes will help the cause, while not giving much fat.
They will add to the growth, and health of the hog.

The farmers of the Gulf states, if it is their intention to get out of the old ruts made in the past, will have to give more time and attention than they have been doing to other crops than cotton, if they hope to succeed as farmers. The increasing demand for beef, pork, poultry and eggs, if supplied to our home markets by the hard worked cotton growers of the Gulf states, would, in the course of the year, bring more ready cash into the family than all the cotton they could possibly grow. To do this a larger area must be planted to corn, oats, alfalfa, cabbage, potatoes of both sorts, turnips, and rutabagas for feeding hogs, cattle, poultry, horses and mules. Until such is the case and until all these things are done, progress will be very slow.
