In Compliment to Mrs. Quigley and Mrs. Owen of Mobile.

An occasion of unusual charm and beauty of detail was the card party at which Mrs. T. G. Owen entertained on Wednesday afternoon in compliment to Mrs. Quigley and Mrs. Owen of Mobile. Everywhere the most exquisite flowers were used to complete a rich floral setting, varied in motif and choice of blossoms. In the drawing room, there were great clusters of callalilies, while a mass of yellow rosebuds made effective mantel decorations; the dining room adjoining had a wealth of field daisies and callalilies, with a more vivid note of color in garlands of crimson rambler roses adorning the punch table. Richmond roses and ferns were combined with perfect result in the library. Whist was played and brought pretty souvenirs to Mrs. T. W. Hardy and Mrs. Hulsey, the former receiving a hat pin of brilliants set in platinum, the latter a silver call bell. To the honorees of the afternoon, tortoise shell braid pins with tracery of silver and rhinestone ornaments, were presented. The guests were: Mrs. Quigley, Mrs. Owen of Mobile, Mrs. John R. Tackett of Meridian, Mrs. Mooney, Mrs. Morgan, Mrs. McKinley, Mrs. Mayo, Mrs. Osborne, Mrs. Fenton Robertson, Mrs. Hugh Hairston, Mrs. Ayers, Mrs. C. C. Williams, Mrs. R. E. Johnston, Mrs. Maer, Mrs. T. J. Locke, Jr., Mrs. Hulsey, Mrs. Brooks, Mrs. Homer Kennedy, Mrs. Ira L. Gaston, Mrs. Johns, Mrs. Hardy, Mrs. Winston, Mrs. Rhett, Mrs. Searcy, Mrs. Ledyard Vaughan, Mrs. Simrall, Mrs. Landrum, Mrs. Charles Frierson, Mrs. Odeneal, Mrs. John R. French, Mrs. Flynn, Mrs. Lee Caine, Miss Garth of Huntsville, Miss Tracy, Miss Billups, Miss Bettie White, Miss Sadie Hudson, Miss Russell, Miss Owen, Miss Mary Garth, Miss Winfred Whitfield, Miss Rhett.

Probably no other feature of the commencement of 1910, will be so impressive and memorable as the exercises that marked the presentation of the silver service to Miss Pauline V. Orr of the college alumnae yesterday afternoon. The gift was made by the college alumnae to commemorate the twenty-fifth year of Miss Orr's splendid work for the young womanhood of the state, and the occasion was significant and of rare pleasure. Miss Ruth Stockett of Birmingham president of the alumnae association, in announcing the object of the meeting, made a charming little address, voicing the love and appreciation of the alumnae for one whose influence has been so far-reaching, potent and uplifting. She next introduced Mrs. William Baldwin, class of 1904, who presented the gift for the association. A delightful speaker always, Mrs. Baldwin was at her best in expressing forcefully and beautifully the deep feeling to which this token testifies. That the signal honor thus shown Miss Orr is entirely merited was evidenced by her touching and eloquent response. The silver service, a Colonial reproduction of seven pieces bears on the coffee urn, this transcription from "Beowulf": "Woman of courage and high soul for thyself thou hast brought by thy work that thy honor shall live forever. Receive this beaker and continue ever in blessedness." Upon the silver kettle is the following inscription in Latin: "Out of love to the lover of human letters, the alumnae of the college of the women of Mississippi have presented this gift to the inspiration and helper of the women of her own state."

Mrs. Vaughan's Reception for Miss Eicholtz.

Miss Ulie Eicholtz, who is to be one of the attractive June brides, was the guest of honor at a lovely reception given by Mrs. Ledyard O. Vaughan on the afternoon of Thursday. The event was of prettiest arrangement. On a picturesque vine-covered veranda, punch was served to a large company of guests by Miss Winfred Whitfield, Miss Mamie Sue Sherrod, Miss Rhett, Miss Artie Peyton and Miss Mary Etta Beard. Within doors a graceful plan of decoration was observed with a lavish harvesting of summer flowers. The hall introduced quantities of deep yellow nasturtiums, the parlor had shaded sweet peas in tones of pink, and from the chandelier, a floral wedding bell, admirable in design and color harmony, was suspended. The dining room was especially artistic in white and green, with lights, green shaded, with white lilies and hydrangeas and tall brass baskets filled with white sweet peas bordering the center table decoration. A shower of white hydrangeas and white ribbons fell in canopy-like effect from chandelier to the mound of hydrangeas forming the centerpiece. In the receiving line were: Mrs. Vaughan, Miss Eicholtz, Miss Sue Foote who will be maid of honor, Miss Jarmon of Kentucky and Miss Sallie Willie Walker the bridesmaids at the Eicholtz-Lewis marriage. Assisting elsewhere were Mrs. Walker of West Point, Mrs. H. S. Hairston, Mrs. Fenton Robertson, Mrs. Gessner Smith, Mrs. Dashiell, Mrs. Phillips, Miss Ella Sherrod and little Misses Emily Rhett and Katharine Maer. An orchestra played during the reception hours, from five until seven o'clock.

The visit of Mrs. Clay-Clopton has been of happiest character, and countless courtesies have been extended her. The Stephen D. Lee Chapter, U. D. C., wishing to compliment her, had in view a reception which, by Mrs. Clopton's request and because of the stress of her recent engagements, was abandoned. In its stead a gratifying and pleasing attention was substituted, the officers of the Chapter visiting Mrs. Clopton Friday afternoon and presenting her with a great armful of callalilies, tied with Confederate colors. Mrs. J. M. Morgan on behalf of the Chapter, gracefully presented the flowers with appropriate and beautiful reference to the distinguished guest. Afterward there was a pilgrimage to the grave of Gen. S. D. Lee.

Engagement of Miss Marianne C. Bradford to Mr. Rice of Tennessee.

Mr. and Mrs. Saunders Billups Bradford announce the engagement and approaching marriage of their sister, Marianne Clarke, to Mr. Lattrelle G. Rice of Chattanooga, Tenn. The wedding will be celebrated at the First Presbyterian church, on the evening of Thursday, June the sixteenth.

al she is so keenly and wonderfully alive to the present, so responsive to its claims, its passing events. You find yourself wondering over the secret that sees her at eighty-six holding fast to the heart of youth and she tells you the secret lies in gathering the roses and forgetting the thorns along the way she has gone. Then you remember the lights and shadows of that way, the gladness and the gloom. You think of her as the toast of Washington in the fifties, the writer whose memoirs are important contributions to American history. Another picture comes as well—the picture of a brave woman who followed the fortunes of war. A woman who pleaded with President Johnson for her husband's life, did seemingly impossible things, secured the intervention of Gen. Grant and others high in authority, and in that dramatic moment which her book recounts, made President swear that he would not deliver her husband and Jefferson Davis over to the military court.

Then, you pay tribute, involuntary and enthusiastic, to the richness and high courage, the sweetness and fragrance of her life.

Mrs. Clay Clopton returns to Columbus after a lapse of more than half a century. Girlhood has yielded to the silvery livery of evening-time, but the lustre and freshness of the morning hang 'round her still.

Tuesday was distinguished by the delightful reception given by Mrs. C. B. Whitfield and Miss Winifred Whitfield, whose hospitality brightened the social legacy of the week. Beautiful decorations prevailed throughout, with sweet peas especially favored, the drawing room having a charming color scheme of lavender, the dining room in white and pink with candelabra capped by pink shades, and a finished blending of the chosen colors in all the elegant table appointments. In the hall, the gold and scarlet of nasturtiums were displayed against a background of palms. The broad porch, where Miss Nellie Whitfield and Miss Annie Lee Senter, served frappe, was tropical with growing plants and vines gracefully festooned. Receiving with Mrs. Whitfield and Miss Whitfield were: Mrs. Donnelly of Houston, Tex., and Mrs. W. E. Dakin. Mrs. Harvey Jones, Mrs. Gessner T. Smith, Miss Vi Newby and Miss Nellie Kittrell assisted in the dining room. Mrs. Ledyard Vaughan, welcoming the guests as they entered had with her the old black "mammy" of the Whitfield household, a quaint figure with her wide expanse of white apron, her curtesy deep, as if she had stepped back from the "Old South" to greet another generation. The afternoon in its entirety was a noteworthy pleasure upon the calendar of departing May.

Rounding out its quarter of a century, the college, like a true Alma Mater, is gathering her daughters together for the celebration of this commencement, and from all parts of the Southland and beyond its borders, the graduates have come for a glad re-union. Preceding the regular commencement exercises were several interesting musical events. Miss Wright's recital Wednesday evening was attended by generous praise for the young singer, the quality of whose voice is remarkably sweet and was perhaps best displayed in the "Jewel Song" from Faust. Thursday evening, Miss Katie Ruth French's recital introduced another young lyric soprano of much promise. Her audience was especially enthusiastic in its reception of Verdi's "Calm Me O' Father" which was most sympathetically interpreted. Friday night, the Senior play, last night the Bach Society and the alumnae banquet. Crowd a full please review upon which commencement Sunday dawned.

Mr. William C. Watson visited Memphis last week, to meet his brother, Mr. Edward Watson of Honolulu, who is at present in the States. Mrs. McFarland nee Watson of Aberdeen, joined them for a brief stay in their old home.

Miss Susie Will Gunter entertained the Junior German Club of the College Thursday evening, at one of the pleasantest parties of the College year. Dutch favors were souvenirs of the evening.

Little Miss Martha Searcy entertained delightfully at Lake Park Friday afternoon, when the celebration of her birthday brought so much pleasure to a crowd of little folk.

The University boys are home for vacation and will by their coming hasten the summer gaieties. Among those arriving last week were: Mr. Cornell Franklin, Mr. Carleton Billups, Mr. Quincy Ayres, Mr. Z. P.
