THORNS IN ROSY PATH

Hamerstein Has Encounters Trouble in Securing Stars For His Grand Opera.

TROUBLES PURSUE HIM ACROSS THE BIG POND

Big Girl Who Was Rejected Threatens to Whip Him—She Had a Good Voice, but Lacked Personal Magnetism—Berlin Experience.

Hearst News Service. London, May 18.—The paths of Oscar Hamerstein in Europe have not been entirely rose-lined. For every flower of operatic value that he has picked he has encountered a thousand thorns.

Every man or woman within reachable distance of Mr. Hamerstein, who thought he or she had a grand opera voice, pursued the impresario at every turn and corner of his European tour.

Without a valet or a secretary, Mr. Hamerstein has been obliged to give personal attention to all the aspirants. He has made managers have brought him within the zone of personal violence at the hands of disappointed aspirants.

"Yes," he said to the American correspondent, "I have had many amusing experiences in Europe—the most amusing, as I think upon it now, at a safe distance, happened in Berlin.

A big, strapping Dutch girl asked me to hear her voice. The hearing took place in the corridors of one of the hotels. She had a magnificent voice, resonant and technically fine, but the woman herself lacked personal magnetism and dramatic sense. As nicely as I could I told her: 'My dear, you have a magnificent voice, but unfortunately for my purposes you are lacking in temperament.'

"Immediately she took off her coat and began to roll up her sleeves, while her eyes flashed anger. 'So I am lacking in temperament, am I?' she said, advancing belligerently upon me. I thought I was in for a severe trouncing. When she was almost within striking distance I began to talk to her in a nice, fatherly way, and she left the hotel discouraged but smiling.

"My, but it was a narrow escape! 'What is my method of doing business?' said Mr. Hamerstein. 'Simply this: I see everybody I wish to see and make up my mind instantly whether I wish to engage them or not, then I announce my decision. I don't need a secretary, because I don't answer any letters, but those that interest me. A tremendous amount of time is lost in what may be termed 'jolly' people along.

"What is the use of writing someone you have no intention of doing business with the usual style of letter. Mr. Hamerstein has received your letter and will keep the matter in mind and should occasion arise, etc. That also arouses false hopes in the applicants, whereas my method, though perhaps less polite, is more straightforward. People who don't receive any word from me may say the 'impolite' brute, but they don't entertain false hopes."

"But," continued Mr. Hamerstein, "my curious adventures have not been wholly in Europe. Let me tell you of a little incident that happened one night in the closing days of my last season at the Manhattan. Some one in the lobby sent word he wanted to see my son Arthur. After waiting for some time, Arthur not appearing, I went up to the gentleman and his wife and asked if I could do anything for them.

"The man explained that Arthur had offered them the courtesy of the house and having come from a distant part of Brooklyn, were naturally disappointed at not seeing him.

"The man then handed me his card. His name was Quinlan or something like that, and he was the head jailer of the Kings County jail. I immediately rushed to the box office and gave Mr. Quinlan a box, the best that was unoccupied in the house. 'Oh, Mr. Hamerstein,' he said, 'I didn't expect this.' 'Never mind,' I assured him. 'I am delighted and perhaps some day in your official capacity you may
