Grover Cleveland.

Capt. J. S. McNeilly, editor of the Vicksburg Herald, the ablest writer on the Mississippi press and one of the ablest in the south, pays this splendid tribute to the life and character and public service of Grover Cleveland:

As a fit and faithful tribute to ex-President Cleveland, Paul's claim to eternal reward loses none of its divine and simple majesty. The heart of the American people is today in unison in its testimony to the good fight fought, the true faith kept, by the departed leader. It was his fate to be called to the helm when the ship of state was launched upon a sea greatly vexed by adverse winds and tortuous currents. More trying than these, there was discord and mutiny, bitter and intolerant, among the crew. Fortunate indeed was it for the nation that when the tempest of passion raged highest, and the clouds of distrust were darkest, there was a pilot at the helm whose fidelity to trust was as right as it was strong—one who could say, as did one of the old philosophers, to the God of the seas and the storms: "Oh Neptune you may save me if you will, but whatever happens, I shall hold my rudder true."

Mr. Cleveland when called to the Presidency was without that training in national affairs which could only be gained by experience in congressional or department life. His mind was unacquainted by college study, or a wide range among the books of classic and current literature. But in natural endowments, in strong common sense, devotion to public duty and courage of conviction, he was pre-eminently the right man for the place. Resolute character, constancy and conscientiousness in purpose were the pillars on which he stood four square, to all the winds that blow. And now the eminent citizen who is mourned throughout the nation today, belongs to history. In that final and just crucible his place in the lists of fame will be determined. It is risking little to predict that in the eternal adjustments, the summing up of record evidence, the balancing of achievement and opportunity. Mr. Cleveland will have historic precedence over all of his contemporaries; of those who have figured in the front rank of affairs since the end of the war era. It is difficult to speak of Mr. Cleveland's election and administration in their relations with the South without emotion. When the news came of his first election, Mr. Lamar was reported to have said, "It comes to the South like a great benediction." It rolled back a stone from the sepulcher of twenty years of harsh and vindictive rule. Under the "shadow of this great rock in a weary land," the South found shelter at last. Southern representative men were again to be seen in the high places, of the house of their fathers; on the supreme bench, in the cabinet, at the heads of departments, as ministers and ambassadors to the highest foreign courts. Old Confederate generals, broken in fortune, were placed in office, at home or abroad, which lifted them above poverty. Better than all, a Democrat in the executive chair of the nation afforded opportunity of repeal of the accursed election laws that caused strife and ferment in the South at every national election. These are memories of Grover Cleveland that are ever to be cherished by Southern men and patriots.

Providence was kind to the ex-President, in granting him ten years of the Presidency; ten years of contented and happy domestic enjoyment. It was also ten years of patient wait, for the coming of justice and reparation, that squared reputation with the record and the right. He lived to see the hour of vindication—when his bitterest enemies joined in the common acclaim of a wise, strong and patriotic career. And thus it was that nearly half a century, gained the goal; rounded the last one of his three score and ten mile posts on the journey of life, in the glow and warmth of the esteem and the pride of his fellow citizens.

Why Not Hattiesburg?

Hattiesburg desires to enter the contest for the honor of entertaining the Mississippi National Guard during the annual encampment next month.

Here is an ideal location for a summer camp—a place possessing all the charms that nature can bestow—a city of the first class in which the soldier boys may feel at home and where they may find hospitality of the true Southern kind.

Hattiesburg would like very much to have the state troops come here. There has never been a state encampment here, and there is no good reason for not securing this one.

That the selection of Hattiesburg as the place for holding the summer military outing would be pleasing to the majority of the soldiers, there can be no doubt. The boys who constitute the National Guard are very sensible young men, and no sensible man would wish to go to any other place when Hattiesburg is available.

The Daily News suggests that the Commercial Club take steps at once to secure the encampment for Hattiesburg. Besides the pleasure of having the state troops with us, Hattiesburg would profit in many ways. Those who come would be so favorably impressed with the progressiveness and beauty of Hattiesburg that they would praise it among thousands of good people.

The financial benefits would be considerable. In addition to the $29,000 of government money to be spent on the encampment, each of the 1,200 or 1,500 men would spend probably half as much more, and $30,000 spent in a town in ten days would help some.

Hattiesburg will stand as good a chance as any city in the state to get the encampment if the proper effort is made in time. Some Mississippi city is going to get it, and why not Hattiesburg? It is one of the healthiest cities in the South; has an abundance of pure sweet artesian water; is fanned by refreshing breezes from the Gulf, wafted through tall and fragrant pines; has everything any city has to add to the pleasure and comfort of the visitors, and 25,000 of the best people on earth to extend the glad hand.

Assuredly Hattiesburg has much to offer in the matter of inducements for the location of the summer camp.

Business Barometer.

The excellent advertising patronage carried in this issue of the Daily News indicates at least two things—that business is reviving in Hattiesburg, and that the business men of the community appreciate this newspaper as a medium through which to reach the buying public of the Hattiesburg district.

Business conditions have been steadily improving for several weeks. The Daily News has felt the uplift substantially, and we have not hesitated to press the standard of the paper higher in appreciation of the increased patronage accorded it.

Better times are imminent. Lines of industry peculiar to this district are reviving. Crop conditions are excellent. The street car line is about to be put into operation. Work is shortly to begin on the New Orleans and Northeastern passenger depot. The Newman mill will probably be rebuilt at an early date. Other industries are preparing to resume on full time. And, best of all, confidence has been restored.

All of which means that Hattiesburg and the Daily News will continue to grow.

Mr. Munsey on the Outlook.

So astute a man of the world and of business as Frank A. Munsey is quoted as saying over in Paris: "Though I am a Republican, I am not so optimistic as are many of my friends who think that Mr. Taft will have a walk-over. On the contrary, I think it will be the hardest fight on record. Whatever objections may be made to Mr. Bryan he is a good runner. His campaign against Mr. McKinley, one of the most popular of our Presidents, showed great fighting quality."

Mr. Munsey has a more penetrating eye and a more logical mind than those friends whom he quotes, who represent it may be remarked in passing, a goodly number of Republicans.

Editor Sullens of the Jackson News kept his editorial oar out of the recent special election for Justice, of the Peace in Beat 1, Forrest County, for which he has our thanks. It is the first election pulled off in Mississippi in something more than five years that the Jackson News hasn't dipped into.

Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln and Cleveland—the republic's great presidents. Others may be added in the long stretch of time, but none of them have yet survived the glamour of the present to be viewed in the impartial scale of time.

If Hattiesburg had its street car line in operation, there'd be no trouble in finding a suitable site for the National Guard state encampment. But that "if."

A Pennsylvania man boasts of the fact that he captured and killed more than 2,000 dogs. He could do better than that in Hattiesburg.

Despite his personal protestations to the contrary, it is said that the Mitchell boomers have opened headquarters in Denver and that they will leave no stone unturned in their effort to place his name on the ticket with Bryan's.

"Friends of an Oklahoma bridegroom locked a cow bell around his neck with a trace chain and threw the key away.

While Mr. Stevens is East selling those street car bonds maybe he'll pick up another factory or two for Hattiesburg.

A new railroad now and then indicates the revival of prosperity in Mississippi.

Genius is largely capacity for hard work.
