MONEY.

Just about this time of year, with the Christmas drawing near, I begin to yearn for money as I never did before.

Money never was, I guess, my one source of happiness.

For I never had a yearning to possess a golden store.

As a poor man I could smile and could whistle all the while.

With my hands deep in the pockets where there wasn't any money; But today my heart is sad, and I wish I had

A fortune just to make the lives of little children sunny.

Just about this time of year, with the Christmas drawing near, I begin to wish I could be rich for just a week or two;

For the curse of being poor is that I must shut my door

On the chance of making merry every little tot I view.

Oh, I wouldn't hoard it up, like a miser, in a cup.

And I wouldn't reinvest it in those solid copper stocks;

But I'd take a shopping trip and I'd let the greenbacks slip

For trumpets and tin soldiers and those lettered building blocks.

There's an orphan girl I know, I would set her heart aglow;

There's a cottage where a mother sits and cries,

For her little children play, all excepting Christmas day,

For they cannot read the sadness in her eyes,

Oh, it's there that I would go, when the lights are burning low,

And their empty stockings I would fill;

This is just the time of year when I'm envious, I fear,

Of the man who has a hundred-dollar bill.

What is poverty to me? I am heart and fancy free,

And the blue skies bend above me as I sing upon my way;

But at just this time of year, with the Christmas drawing near,

I'd like to be a millionaires for just about a day.

O, it's not that now I sigh for the pleasures gold would buy—

For all forms of disappointments I have known, toe were everywhere in evidence, the entire color-scheme, appropriate to the Christmas season. Rev. and Mrs. O'Bryant were assisted in their pleasant duties by Prof. Gains Dobbins, the popular president of this splendid organization. Prof. Dobbins' interest in the Union for its enlargement, scope of work and spiritual vane throughout, is worthy of highest praise. The most welcome guest present was Santa Claus, dressed in a complete Santa Claus outfit, in the person of Mr. Collins. He certainly played the role well. The refreshments were served by him also, and the idea was so unique, as a dainty pretty stocking, well filled with fruit and candy, was presented to each guest by Santa Claus. An interesting musical program was well carried out by the following splendid musicians, Misses Bertha and Ruby Batson, Lela Ware, Cora Golden, Messrs. Thad Batson, McNair and others. Miss Flora Byrd gave a splendid reading, which was very much appreciated. There were about sixty guests present, and all were entertained with that dainty charm which marks all of the entertainments given by Rev. and Mrs. O'Bryant, every detail of which was quite perfect, and the whole a delight to each guest, as they are both gifted with unusual hospitality, and possessing, to a rare degree, the tact and ease of manner so necessary to social success.

Rev. and Mrs. T. B. Holloman will leave Monday for their new home at Edwards, where Dr. Holloman will be pastor next year. Their removal causes genuine regret, not only by the people of his own congregation, but by all who know them. There is no gain saying the fact, however, that "to know them is to love them." No pastor who has ever before been here was more beloved or more highly appreciated than was Dr. Holloman. The best wishes of innumerable friends will follow them wherever they go.

Miss Annie Cora Gillian very charmingly entertained a few friends at a chafing dish party last evening at her lovely home on Mabel street. The evening was a great delight to all who participated therein. Dainty refreshments were served. An interesting feature was a vocal solo, beautifully rendered by Miss Ruth Daughdrill. Those present were Miss Ruth Daughdrill, and Mr. Curry, Miss Hattie Hill and Curtis Ferrell, Miss Ruth Daughdrill and Chester Jones.

Mr. and Mrs. Johnson have the sympathy of the community in the loss of their eight-year-old son, which sad event occurred in the Irene chapel neighborhood Thursday. The remains were shipped to McCallum yesterday, when the interment took place. Rev. A. O'Bryant accompanied the remains and conducted the funeral service.

The children of the Main Street M. E. church, who are taking part in the entertainment, they are going to give at the church Wednesday evening, December 23, are requested to
