YERGER RETURNS HOME AFTER LONG ABSENCE

Left Jackson Twenty Years Ago and Had Been Mourned For Dead.

Hearst News Service.
Jackson, Dec. 26.—After an absence of twenty years, spent in the West and lately in Texas, Alex Yerger walked into the home of his aged mother, Mrs. Malvina H. Yerger, on North President street on Christmas eve, without notice of any kind. During this twenty years the mother, who recently celebrated her ninetieth birthday, had not heard from her son and did not know whether he was living or dead, or where he was. He himself is about forty years old and is said to

LUTHER BRAGG WANTS A PARDON

Jackson, Dec. 26.—Governor Noel will shortly be asked to grant a pardon to Luther Bragg a Scott county negro serving a seven-year sentence in the penitentiary for burglary, less than one year of which sentence has been served. It is set forth in the petition that the prisoner had been working for a farmer named Z. Z. Oswald, and that his crime consisted in climbing in Oswald's house through a window and stealing something to eat when he was hungry, and that on account of his relation as a laborer he did not know that he was committing a crime.

Pitiful appeal has come to Mrs. Keniah Whaley, grandmother of Flaretta Whaley, who eloped with Rev. Jere Knode, rector of St. George's Church in Hempstead, L. I., stating that she and her two children are in need. The grandmother refuses to give her any assistance, unless she leaves Knode.

NEGRO WILL APPEAL BECAUSE JURORS HAD IMBIBED LIQUID JOY

Daily News Special
Jackson, Dec. 26.—Notice of appeal to the supreme court has been received in the case of State vs. Watson, from the circuit court of Warren county, in which some new and interesting legal points are involved.

Watson is a negro and was recently given a life sentence for the killing of Tom C. Miller, a white man. The tragedy occurred in a Vicksburg saloon on Oct. 7, 1907, and the trial lasted for more than a week. Miller was a former citizen of Jackson, and his relatives retained several able attorneys to aid in the prosecution.

The assignment of errors will set forth, among other things, that members of the trial jury were allowed the use of intoxicating liquors while the trial was in progress, and that several whiskey and beer bottles, all empty, were found in the jury room after the body had returned its verdict. It is also alleged that a copy of Collier's Weekly containing an article severely criticizing the laxity in administering the law in America, was found in the jury room; that a copy of Collier's containing a revolting murder story was also discovered in the room.

Many other allegations are contained in the appeal, one of which is that Watson did not get a fair trial because there were no negroes on the jury, although there are many negroes in Warren county eligible to jury service, and the failure to summon negroes on the special venire was a violation of the fourteenth amendment to the federal constitution.

SECRETS OF THE TOILET.

Altogether Unnecessary to Allow "Hubby" to See Mysteries.

"It is a great mistake to let one's husband into toilet secrets," sighed a woman who has been brought face to face with the certain knowledge of her spouse's admiration for pretty women. The wife is pretty—much prettier, in fact, than any rival he has forced upon her—and she is sweet-tempered. She probably has her share of faults, but the man she married is sufficiently gallant to declare that they do not exist, so it is safe to say that they cannot be serious ones. Yet the fact remains that she has not been able to hold the man who used to be devoted to her.

I am inclined to believe that she has struck the keynote of her domestic trouble. The intimacy of family life discloses many homely facts, as the brother of the bachelor girl said when he found her beautifying before the mirror of her dressing table. She had left the door of her bedroom wide open, and called to her brother as he passed through the hall. She had tucked her hair into a rubber cap, the kind used for sea bathing, and was smearing her face with cold cream to the broad band of rubber which hid the hair line, and every bit of prettiness had been taken from her face.

The brother was a married man, but had never seen anything like the spectacle before him. His wife was much too clever to allow him to suspect that her charms owed anything to art; so his sister smiled a bit when he said, emphatically: "If my wife ever looked like you in your present plight, sis, I would divorce her." He took a deal of pride in his wife's fresh face and general air of smartness, and had not the smallest idea of the unceasing care they required. How should he, when all beautifying was done while he toiled for the family bread and butter, and his wife was quite as pretty in the morning as at midday?

TO HOLD THE WATCH.

Contrivance of Great Utility for the Hours of Night.

This novel little holder for a watch is intended for hanging upon the wall by the side of a bed, and into which a watch may be slipped at night-time, and be easily seen when required.

A piece of stout cardboard of the shape shown should be used for the foundation, and in the center a circular hole cut to fit the watch it is intended for. The cardboard can be covered with any pretty piece of silk or brocade on which has been worked some pretty little floral design. It is entirely edged with cord, and there is a loop at the top by which it may be hung upon the wall. At the back of the circular space, cut in the center, is sewn a small pocket of wash leather, into which the watch may be placed; the lower sketch of the back view explains this.

Fancy Work for Nerves.

There is an epidemic of fancy work over the land. Women who vowed they would never embroider or crochet are doing both.

Every one does fancy work. You see women knitting cravats on the train, and at informal dinners it is done between courses or at coffee time.

The doctors say that fancy work, quietly done, is an excellent remedy for nervousness. They claim that the busy woman who is rushed through the day hours should learn to pick up fancy work at night and keep at it while she is talking.

The slow, definite preciseness of it is soothing. It keeps the mind from thinking and the thoughts from running around in a distracted circle.

Two Smart Ties.

Smart and easily made ties are formed from strips of Irish crochet insertion about three inches wide, and long enough to tie in a four-in-hand or small bow with long ends.

The ends of these ties are finished in tiny ball fringe. Sometimes the entire length of the tie is bound in a bias strip of white or colored silk a quarter of an inch wide.

More serviceable, but quite as easily made, are long ties of black or any desired color of satin-finished soft silk or taffeta, about two inches wide and finished with pointed ends.

These ties hang below the bust line, and are fastened at the throat with knit slides of embroidery silk the same color.
