PROSPECTOR OF THE MADISONIAN.

THE undersigned will publish a Weekly Newspaper in the Town of Canton, under the above title, commencing Thursday 21st February, 1850. The "MADISONIAN" will be thoroughly democratic in its course. Upon the subjects of a National Bank, Internal Improvements by the Government, and the distribution of the proceeds of the public lands, we concur in the opinions always entertained by the great body of the REPUBLICAN PARTY. Aside from the constitutional objections that may be urged against a National Bank, experience has demonstrated that the and monetary affairs of the government can be safely and conveniently managed without the aid of such an institution. The Constitutional Treasury, in practical bearing, has fully come up to the expectations of its most sanguine friends, and falsified the predictions of evil so confidently made by its enemies, so that at this day, the latter longer urge objections to its main principles, but suggest only modifications of its minor details. Upon the Tariff question, the "MADISONIAN" will advocate the Free Trade doctrine. By the Trade, we do not mean the abolition of Custom-houses, and of all duties upon imports, but a system of mutual intercourse, as free and untrammelled as it can be, consistently with the present mode of raising revenue. In short, we contend that Congress should discriminate with a view to Revenue alone, and not for protection - being the only object recognized by Constitution in the grant of the power. The power of the Federal Government to embark in a general system of Internal Improvements, and the propriety of such a course, have ever been denied by strict constructionists. Difficulty has been to draw the line of distinction between objects strictly national in their character, and others necessarily embraced in that category. We maintain, in common with the great mass of the Democratic party that the general government should confine its aid to such works of Internal Improvement as belong to the reform class, leaving all others to the fostering care of the local legislatures of the several states, or to the enterprise of private citizens; believing the line of demarcation between national and such as are not has been clearly elucidated and maintained by the late President in his veto of the River and Harbor bill. Should the wild scheme of diverting among the several States, the proceeds of the public lands, be brought by this or any other administration, we deem it our duty to oppose through in justice to our political opponents, we must add that we do not believe it was ever seriously entertained by any respectable number of men to make that measure a test of party principles. Regarding the veto power as a check and a salutary safeguard against over-much-legislation, we are opposed to any modification of it, and condemn the demagogical spirit which proposes to restrict its exercise. The President of the United States being the only branch of the law-making power elected by the whole people, we regard as the Tribune of the people, armed with the veto power, to prevent any encroachments upon its rights. To abridge this power is to restrict its exercise to a specified number of cases, enumerated in some creed, or political catechism, would be in direct contravention of the words of the constitution. From this brief exposition of principles, it will be seen, that we will be necessarily placed in the most opposition to the present Administration, but it will be no factious opposition. The "MADISONIAN" will not sign the dignity of thought and will reserve to itself the right of mending whatever it may deem mendable in its political enemies, of censuring whatever it may deem censurable in the course of public life. Whist upon all measures of Party Politics we will not disregard our glance to party, upon the great question of "Southern Rights," we will ourselves of the feelings of our citizenship, and be governed in our sole by what we conceive to be the interest of our own portion of the federalty. Though cherishing and abiding attachment to the "MADISONIAN" will advocate the strongest measures of opposition to Northern aggression, planting the unanswerable positions of Southern Address, and also those of our own State Convention - in a word, will be prepared to sustain such an organized plan of resistance to the dangerous assaults made upon the political schemes and philanthropic of the abolitionists. Situated in the midst of an agricultural population, a due portion of the columns will be devoted to their interests. A. F. HILL, R. D. PRICE.
