

THE SOUTHERN TELEGRAPH

AT FIVE DOLLARS per year, in advance, or Six at the expiration of the year.

Per square of ten lines or less, for the first insertion, One Dollar; for each additional insertion, Fifty Cents.

Longer ones, ten cents per line for the first, and five cents per line for each additional insertion.

To those who advertise by the year, a liberal discount will be made.

POETRY.

PROSE.

BY M. S. GOULD.

The frost looked forth one still cold night, And he said 'I shall be out of sight, So through the valley, and over the height...

Then he went to the mountain and powdered its crest, He hid his face in the trees and their boughs he dressed...

He went to the windows of those who slept, And over each pane like a fairy crept, Wherever he breathed, wherever he stepped...

But he did one thing that was hardly fair, He went to the cupboard, and finding there That all a-forgotten for him to prepare...

'Tis midnight's holy hour—and silence now Is brooding like a gentle spirit o'er The still and pulseless world...

For memory and for tears. Within the deep Still chamber of the heart a spirit dwells, Whose tones are like the wizard voice of Time...

Over what has passed to nothingness. The year Has gone, and with it, many a glorious thought Of happy dreams. Its part's in each our brow...

Flashed in the light of mid-day—and the strength Of fiercer hosts is shivered, and the grass, Green from the soil of carnage, waves above...

Pierce Spirit of the Glass and Scythe—what power Can stay him in his silent course, or melt His iron heart of pity! On, still on...

These tall heads to the plain—New Empires rise, Gathering the strength of many centuries, And rush down like the Alpine avalanche...

An eminent barrister had a case sent to him for an opinion. The case stated was the most preposterous and improbable that ever occurred in the mind of man...

It is estimated that there are thirty-two millions five hundred and sixty-four thousand newspapers annually issued from the New York press.

A man is not made ridiculous so much by the qualities which he really has, as by those he affects to have.

MISCELLANEOUS. THE WEDDED LIFE.

BY MRS. SANFORD.

I may perhaps startle you, Effie, by saying that the first year of a young woman's wedded life is the most unhappy, and the most trying one she experiences.

By action is the affection on either side shown, and although it is in the power and nature of a woman to manifest her devotedness and tenderness by a thousand little attentions...

It is said that "Lovers' quarrels" are but the renewal of love, but it is not so in truth. Continued differences and bickering will undermine the strongest affection...

Every wish, every prejudice must meet with attention, and the first thought of the woman should be the pleasing and providing for her husband. It is impossible to enumerate all the little incidents which annoy married men...

The greatest misery a woman can experience is the change of heart and altered affections of her husband; but even in that painful case the duties must relax in the performance of her duties...

Some women, in order to win back a husband's wandering love have recourse to attempts to arouse his jealousy; but they are much mistaken in pursuing such a method.

A man, however debased his conduct, never entirely forgets the love he once bore to the bride of his youth; there are moments when feelings of tenderness for her will return with force to his heart...

This will not be difficult for a virtuous woman to perform. Our love, which before marriage is constrained by the modesty and reserve natural to our sex, increases in fervency and depth afterwards...

An eminent barrister had a case sent to him for an opinion. The case stated was the most preposterous and improbable that ever occurred in the mind of man...

It is estimated that there are thirty-two millions five hundred and sixty-four thousand newspapers annually issued from the New York press.

A man is not made ridiculous so much by the qualities which he really has, as by those he affects to have.

A man is not made ridiculous so much by the qualities which he really has, as by those he affects to have.

A man is not made ridiculous so much by the qualities which he really has, as by those he affects to have.

A man is not made ridiculous so much by the qualities which he really has, as by those he affects to have.

A man is not made ridiculous so much by the qualities which he really has, as by those he affects to have.

A man is not made ridiculous so much by the qualities which he really has, as by those he affects to have.

ADVERTISING ANECDOTE.

Mr. T., a tailor, who had been advertising for a few weeks in the Transcript, called at our office a day or two since, exhibiting the appearance and emotions of a man who is worn out with hard labor...

Mr. T., departed, to resume the measure and the shears; and if any tailor, or other mechanic, is desirous of adding to his business, and is not afraid of being overruled therewith, he is now acquainted with the means of obtaining his desires.

This isn't bad—but then we should not have thought of mentioning a circumstance like this. Why, bless your heart, brother Transcript, we could tell you over hundreds of facts illustrating the miraculous benefits of advertising in the Herald that would throw your story into the middle of last week.

Here our devil must needs put his ear;—Why, (says he) don't you remember about us how Mr. T., the dealer—and Mr. T., the Tailor—and Mr. T., the publisher—had your tongue?—we had to sup the young dog, or else he'd have rattled over half our list of advertisers.

High RELATIONS.—Nell Gwynne was often successful in throwing ridicule upon her rival, the Duchess of Portsmouth, originally Miss Grouville. She pretended to be related to the best families in France, and whenever one of their members died she put herself in mourning.

The Moon.—Professor Gruthausen, of Munich, declared publicly some time since that he had discovered indisputable proofs that the Moon, like the Earth, is inhabited.

The National Intelligencer of yesterday says.—We observed that Mr. CLAY's seat in the Senate was vacant yesterday. We learn with real sorrow, that his absence was caused by the afflictive news of the death of his only remaining daughter, Mrs. Irvine.

According to my bond, nor more nor less. Occurrences of a highly exciting and offensive nature, having recently taken place in some of the non-slaveholding States, called out, if persisted in, to afford us in a most serious and vital manner.

Under existing circumstances, learning that a resort to European markets in order to obtain a sufficient loan may become necessary, and that a pledge of the faith and credit of the state may be required, I view the prohibitory clause in our constitution as a matter of regret.

The objections to the policy of rearing up in ricks at home, and aiding them by every facility of intercourse, as far as I have learned are not based upon argument or fact but predicated on the round assertion that the scheme is impracticable—that neither Natchez, nor any other point on the river, within our limits, can ever become a shipping port.

It seems to me that so desirable an object deserves at least an energetic and united effort. I see no reason to doubt that the State roads can compete, and successfully too, with the New Orleans and Nashville road on fair terms.

When the play and energies of the mind, free and untrammelled, are called into action, we may anticipate that manly and fiery course, of which we are justly envious, and which should always characterize the acts of deliberative bodies.

Any collision with the general government as far as it can properly be avoided, is to be deprecated. Nothing of a light or unimportant character, should be suffered to produce such a result. But a due regard to the interest of the state, induces me to advert to a circumstance in our federal relations that may claim your attention.

The right to this reservation heretofore, has been clearly recognized. The propriety of some expression of your body, by which our delegation in Congress may probably be aided in effecting a proper and satisfactory adjustment of the claim, is submitted for your deliberation.

The National Intelligencer of yesterday says.—We observed that Mr. CLAY's seat in the Senate was vacant yesterday. We learn with real sorrow, that his absence was caused by the afflictive news of the death of his only remaining daughter, Mrs. Irvine.

According to my bond, nor more nor less. Occurrences of a highly exciting and offensive nature, having recently taken place in some of the non-slaveholding States, called out, if persisted in, to afford us in a most serious and vital manner.

A man is not made ridiculous so much by the qualities which he really has, as by those he affects to have.

INAUGURAL ADDRESS OF GOVERNOR LYNCH.

[CONCLUDED.]

Under existing circumstances, learning that a resort to European markets in order to obtain a sufficient loan may become necessary, and that a pledge of the faith and credit of the state may be required, I view the prohibitory clause in our constitution as a matter of regret.

The objections to the policy of rearing up in ricks at home, and aiding them by every facility of intercourse, as far as I have learned are not based upon argument or fact but predicated on the round assertion that the scheme is impracticable—that neither Natchez, nor any other point on the river, within our limits, can ever become a shipping port.

It seems to me that so desirable an object deserves at least an energetic and united effort. I see no reason to doubt that the State roads can compete, and successfully too, with the New Orleans and Nashville road on fair terms.

When the play and energies of the mind, free and untrammelled, are called into action, we may anticipate that manly and fiery course, of which we are justly envious, and which should always characterize the acts of deliberative bodies.

Any collision with the general government as far as it can properly be avoided, is to be deprecated. Nothing of a light or unimportant character, should be suffered to produce such a result. But a due regard to the interest of the state, induces me to advert to a circumstance in our federal relations that may claim your attention.

The right to this reservation heretofore, has been clearly recognized. The propriety of some expression of your body, by which our delegation in Congress may probably be aided in effecting a proper and satisfactory adjustment of the claim, is submitted for your deliberation.

The National Intelligencer of yesterday says.—We observed that Mr. CLAY's seat in the Senate was vacant yesterday. We learn with real sorrow, that his absence was caused by the afflictive news of the death of his only remaining daughter, Mrs. Irvine.

According to my bond, nor more nor less. Occurrences of a highly exciting and offensive nature, having recently taken place in some of the non-slaveholding States, called out, if persisted in, to afford us in a most serious and vital manner.

A man is not made ridiculous so much by the qualities which he really has, as by those he affects to have.

A man is not made ridiculous so much by the qualities which he really has, as by those he affects to have.

A man is not made ridiculous so much by the qualities which he really has, as by those he affects to have.

A man is not made ridiculous so much by the qualities which he really has, as by those he affects to have.

A man is not made ridiculous so much by the qualities which he really has, as by those he affects to have.

A man is not made ridiculous so much by the qualities which he really has, as by those he affects to have.

A man is not made ridiculous so much by the qualities which he really has, as by those he affects to have.

A man is not made ridiculous so much by the qualities which he really has, as by those he affects to have.

A man is not made ridiculous so much by the qualities which he really has, as by those he affects to have.

INAUGURAL ADDRESS OF GOVERNOR LYNCH.

[CONCLUDED.]

Under existing circumstances, learning that a resort to European markets in order to obtain a sufficient loan may become necessary, and that a pledge of the faith and credit of the state may be required, I view the prohibitory clause in our constitution as a matter of regret.

The objections to the policy of rearing up in ricks at home, and aiding them by every facility of intercourse, as far as I have learned are not based upon argument or fact but predicated on the round assertion that the scheme is impracticable—that neither Natchez, nor any other point on the river, within our limits, can ever become a shipping port.

It seems to me that so desirable an object deserves at least an energetic and united effort. I see no reason to doubt that the State roads can compete, and successfully too, with the New Orleans and Nashville road on fair terms.

When the play and energies of the mind, free and untrammelled, are called into action, we may anticipate that manly and fiery course, of which we are justly envious, and which should always characterize the acts of deliberative bodies.

Any collision with the general government as far as it can properly be avoided, is to be deprecated. Nothing of a light or unimportant character, should be suffered to produce such a result. But a due regard to the interest of the state, induces me to advert to a circumstance in our federal relations that may claim your attention.

The right to this reservation heretofore, has been clearly recognized. The propriety of some expression of your body, by which our delegation in Congress may probably be aided in effecting a proper and satisfactory adjustment of the claim, is submitted for your deliberation.

The National Intelligencer of yesterday says.—We observed that Mr. CLAY's seat in the Senate was vacant yesterday. We learn with real sorrow, that his absence was caused by the afflictive news of the death of his only remaining daughter, Mrs. Irvine.

According to my bond, nor more nor less. Occurrences of a highly exciting and offensive nature, having recently taken place in some of the non-slaveholding States, called out, if persisted in, to afford us in a most serious and vital manner.

A man is not made ridiculous so much by the qualities which he really has, as by those he affects to have.

A man is not made ridiculous so much by the qualities which he really has, as by those he affects to have.

A man is not made ridiculous so much by the qualities which he really has, as by those he affects to have.

A man is not made ridiculous so much by the qualities which he really has, as by those he affects to have.

A man is not made ridiculous so much by the qualities which he really has, as by those he affects to have.

A man is not made ridiculous so much by the qualities which he really has, as by those he affects to have.

A man is not made ridiculous so much by the qualities which he really has, as by those he affects to have.

A man is not made ridiculous so much by the qualities which he really has, as by those he affects to have.

A man is not made ridiculous so much by the qualities which he really has, as by those he affects to have.

INAUGURAL ADDRESS OF GOVERNOR LYNCH.

[CONCLUDED.]

Under existing circumstances, learning that a resort to European markets in order to obtain a sufficient loan may become necessary, and that a pledge of the faith and credit of the state may be required, I view the prohibitory clause in our constitution as a matter of regret.

The objections to the policy of rearing up in ricks at home, and aiding them by every facility of intercourse, as far as I have learned are not based upon argument or fact but predicated on the round assertion that the scheme is impracticable—that neither Natchez, nor any other point on the river, within our limits, can ever become a shipping port.

It seems to me that so desirable an object deserves at least an energetic and united effort. I see no reason to doubt that the State roads can compete, and successfully too, with the New Orleans and Nashville road on fair terms.

When the play and energies of the mind, free and untrammelled, are called into action, we may anticipate that manly and fiery course, of which we are justly envious, and which should always characterize the acts of deliberative bodies.

Any collision with the general government as far as it can properly be avoided, is to be deprecated. Nothing of a light or unimportant character, should be suffered to produce such a result. But a due regard to the interest of the state, induces me to advert to a circumstance in our federal relations that may claim your attention.

The right to this reservation heretofore, has been clearly recognized. The propriety of some expression of your body, by which our delegation in Congress may probably be aided in effecting a proper and satisfactory adjustment of the claim, is submitted for your deliberation.

The National Intelligencer of yesterday says.—We observed that Mr. CLAY's seat in the Senate was vacant yesterday. We learn with real sorrow, that his absence was caused by the afflictive news of the death of his only remaining daughter, Mrs. Irvine.

According to my bond, nor more nor less. Occurrences of a highly exciting and offensive nature, having recently taken place in some of the non-slaveholding States, called out, if persisted in, to afford us in a most serious and vital manner.

A man is not made ridiculous so much by the qualities which he really has, as by those he affects to have.

A man is not made ridiculous so much by the qualities which he really has, as by those he affects to have.

A man is not made ridiculous so much by the qualities which he really has, as by those he affects to have.

A man is not made ridiculous so much by the qualities which he really has, as by those he affects to have.

A man is not made ridiculous so much by the qualities which he really has, as by those he affects to have.

A man is not made ridiculous so much by the qualities which he really has, as by those he affects to have.

A man is not made ridiculous so much by the qualities which he really has, as by those he affects to have.

A man is not made ridiculous so much by the qualities which he really has, as by those he affects to have.

A man is not made ridiculous so much by the qualities which he really has, as by those he affects to have.