The U.S. Army Surgeon General

Lieutenant General Leonard D. Heaton was born in Parkersburg, West Virginia on November 18, 1902. He received his M.D. degree from the University of Louisville, Kentucky in 1926 after having completed his pre-medical course at Denison University in Granville, Ohio in 1922.

General Heaton, who has often been referred to as the "surgeon's surgeon," was named Army Surgeon General April 25, 1959.

Earlier in his career when Pearl Harbor was attacked, General Heaton was chief of the surgical service at North Sector General Hospital, Schofield Barracks, Hawaii. For his competence in handling the wounded during the attack, he received the Legion of Merit.

General Heaton has performed surgery on many well-known men, including former President Eisenhower and the late Secretary of State, John Foster Dulles.

General Heaton has been awarded the Distinguished Service Medal, the Army's highest non-combat award.

Renowned not only for his great surgical skill, but also for his warm interest in the careers of young Army doctors, General Heaton has given much of himself and his time to the training of these officers for many years.

Choose Irrigated Pasture Mixtures To fit Conditions

Farmers and ranchers who are planning to put in irrigated pastures this spring are reminded by agronomists at Montana State College to choose carefully the grass-legume mixture they will use.

Some 20 grass-legume mixtures are recommended for irrigated pastures in Montana, the agronomists point out. The composition of these mixtures depends on environment and the state is divided into six districts for the purpose of recommending mixtures.

In addition, the mixtures are designed for specific conditions within the districts such as well drained soils and for particular purposes such as permanent pastures or short time rotation pastures. Further selection may be needed to fit a mixture to conditions on the individual farm.

Information on these mixtures may be obtained from County Extension Agents. Also, a number of mixtures are listed in the Montana Agricultural Experiment Station circular, "Forage Crop Varieties for Montana." Copies of this circular are available at County Extension Offices.

Crops under reseed loans in Montana include wheat of the 1969, 1968 and 1967 crops and barley of the 1969 and 1968 crops. Rates of the advance storage payments are 7 cents per bushel. The remaining storage payment due will be paid — at similar rates — after the maturity dates of loans, which are March 31 for wheat and April 30 for barley.
