HORSES AND THE FIRE DEPARTMENT.

There is a lot of sound sense in Alderman Seaman's argument that the street department should not be expected to provide the fire department with horses. Under such a condition the people are being deceived as to the appropriations. When at the beginning of the year a certain amount of money is set aside for the street department and another for the fire department the people have a right to expect that that amount will be devoted to the departments named. But if for some reason or other the appropriation for one of the departmetns is made smaller than necessary with the expectation of calling upon another department for part of its equipment, the city government becomes confused and it is hard to tell just exactly how we stand.

The street department spends a great deal of money in the purchase of horses, and whenever the fire company needs a new team it is the custom to take it from the street department and devote the horses to pulling the fire apparatus. Then, within a short time the street department finds itself short a team and more horses are bought. This invariably is charged up to the street department, whereas it should be counted in with the expense of running the fire department.

As the city has to maintain horses for the fire department there is no reason why the fire department should not receive the money necessary to buy the horses, only let it be charged up where it belongs. There is no reason why the street department should be forced to surrender its horses to the fire department than that the health board should be forced to turn any of its employes or equipment over to the water department or any other branch of the government to be used exclusively by that committee. It is just such a mixture as this and confusion in accounts that has brought about the dissatisfaction with the municipal form of government and has caused so many cities to adopt the government by commission.

SOLVING THE DUST NUISANCE.

Much interest is at once aroused all over the city, but particularly in the southern section, by the announcement that what is believed to be a real solution to the dust nuisance from the factories has been found. Interest is added to the fact that it is a local man who has conceived the idea, and if Thomas Grieve, water commissioner and chief engineer at the Raritan Copper Works, succeeds in stopping the dust that now comes from the stacks of that plant and settles all over the southern section of the city, he will bring relief to many hard-working mothers, make home life more agreeable and enhance the value of property.

Mr. Grieve's idea has yet to be put to the test. It may not succeed. It furnishes a hope, however, and is encouraging. Mr. Grieve has doubtless given the matter a great deal of study and must feel reasonably sure of success or he would not announce his plan. By checking the velocity of the gases that go up the stacks he expects to prevent the dust particles from being thrown off.

Anything sounds good to the people of the southern section of the city. They have suffered long and not without some fault-finding, which is natural. Perth Amboy is a manufacturing city, however, and we must contend with a great many things that are disagreeable. Industries we must have and must put up with what goes with them. American cities, it seems, have not advanced as far as some European municipalities in the matter of regulating industries. Over there, we are told, some cities have a certain section set apart for the factories, which is so located that the prevailing winds carry the smoke, dust and smell away from the city, not over it. If water transportation is needed they dig artificial waterways to the factories.

This may be bordering on the ideal, but Perth Amboy, alone, cannot attempt to reform America. As long as all the other cities here will give the industries all the privileges they want, and are glad to get them, Perth Amboy must be content if she would maintain her position in the industrial world.

But it is gratifying to know that local industries are striving to remedy the greatest nuisances that come from their plants. We are satisfied that they are doing this. The announcement of Mr. Grieve shows that they are constantly trying to solve the problems. It is to be hoped that his experiment with the Copper Works dust will be successful.

ESPERANTO STENOGRAPHERS WANTED.

The great progress being made by the international language, Esperanto, is shown by an advertisement now running in the EVENING NEWS and other newspapers for a stenographer who is thoroughly familiar with that auxiliary language. When an Esperanto class was first established in this city two years ago, it was predicted by Mr. H. W. Fisher, the founder, that before long there would be a demand for teachers for the language and positions would be offered for those familiar with it. The class was told that while the study of Esperanto might seem of little value then, the time was coming when it would be found very useful.

The advertisement now running in the EVENING NEWS is, in a sense, a fulfillment of this prediction. This advertisement is for a responsible business man in New York who realizes the advantage of Esperanto as a means of communicating with people of all nationalities. It is certain that the person who secures the position will be well pleased and have reason to be glad for the time spent in learning Esperanto.

This advertisement is published in Perth Amboy because of the publicity this city has received in Esperanto circles. The several articles that have appeared in the EVENING NEWS from time to time have been reproduced in the Esperanto journals which have a world-wide circulation. Also the fact that an Esperanto group exists here is set forth in the year book of the Esperantists, together with statistics about the city and its many industries. The local Esperanto society is therefore talking Perth Amboy all over the world, and that it is having results is evident from the advertisement that is now appearing in our columns.

Those who keep in touch with the spread of the language, particularly in Europe, where there are so many different languages in a comparatively small territory, realize the success of Esperanto and know that it has gained more than a permanent foothold. It has stood the test of time and, unlike other artificial languages, becomes stronger and more popular the more the people become familiar with it.

One of the most significant indications of the increasing importance of Esperanto is the fact that at the session of the International Chamber of Commerce recently held in Spain a resolution was adopted recommending the teaching of Esperanto in all commercial schools throughout the world. It is evident that when a big commercial organization of this kind takes notice of the language, it is something more than a passing fad.

Perth Amboy has some good Esperantists and it would be a creditable thing if someone from this city should secure the position that is now offered through our advertising columns.

COMMENT BY THE PRESS

JERSEY AND THE NATION

Not since 1776 has the state of New Jersey been in such intimate touch with the very pulse beats of the national government. Of course Jersey has always been a faithful and loyal commonwealth and has invariably been among the first to offer its sons in times of war or need. But now there can not be a national occurrence of any character that the people of the state are not personally interested in.

It all centers about the election of Woodrow Wilson. He is a Jerseyman from our own country. He has surrounded himself to a very large degree by the men with whom he came in contact while at the head of the state government. At least they have been his advisers. First there is Mr. Tumulty. Mr. Tumulty is more than a private secretary. He is a close friend and advisor who stood by Woodrow Wilson when he was having troubles of his own at the State House. Mr. Tumulty has grown very close to the president's heart.

Then there is Secretary of War Garrison. The very thought of war brings to mind that the secretary was a vice chancellor from the bench of the Chancery Court. From Princeton the President has taken several great scholars and placed them in the nation's field, either at home or abroad.

In all the offices and departments, in places of honor and dignity Jersey is represented today as it has never been before. Jersey is the parent of the administration to a large degree and the state justly feels proud. —Trenton Times.

Sauce Used With Meats, Fish and Vegetables Gave Them Appetizing Touch.

John calls left-overs "stale, flat and unprofitable." Can it be that you have tried giving them to him in their depressing, undisguised state? Of course, hash and croquettes are such familiar masks that they may be said to be no longer effective, but even they may be made alluring to the eye and satisfying to the inner man by the addition of a sauce—a really artistic sauce. The "Cook Book of Leftovers" (Harper's) has twenty-five different recipes for sauces in one of its seventeen chapters.

Some are good for scalloped dishes and omelets, others for vegetables and boiled fish. Each solves a host of problems of how to make over the left-over, so that it will be better than new.

There are also general directions for sauce makers—how quickly or slowly to pour the vinegar and oil when making a French dressing; just what is the trick that makes sauces of a delectable smoothness, etc.

Egg Sauce—Here, for instance, is a novel egg sauce:

Place two eggs in rapidly boiling water, cover tightly, remove to cooler part of stove, and let stand six minutes. The whites should be solid and yolks soft. Beat in the soft yolks and add the chopped whites to one cup of white sauce No. 2. Just before serving add one teaspoonful chopped parsley. Serve with boiled fish.

The white sauce referred to is made of the following ingredients: Two tablespoonfuls butter, two tablespoonfuls flour, one-quarter teaspoonful salt, one-eighth teaspoonful white pepper, one cup milk.

BEST WAY TO WASH FLANNEL

Never Rub Laundry Soap Directly on Material as It Makes It Stiff.

Some one asked directions for washing flannels, some time ago, stating that four or five visits to the laundry always spoiled hers. Here is my solution of her difficulty.

We all know that great care must be taken in washing flannels to prevent their becoming thick, stiff, and often gummy in texture. I never rub laundry soap directly on flannels, as it causes them to stiffen almost perceptibly, and gumminess is produced by the soap not being well-rinsed out. Passing from warm suds to cold rinsing water will soon change the softest flannels into cloth like heavy felt. The practice of using the suds in which other clothes have been washed or boiled is not to be recommended. It pays to take clean, fresh suds for flannels, and give your attention to them.

I collect all flannel articles, blankets, etc., for a separate washing, and shake and brush them well before putting them in the tub. Have a clean, hot suds, made with pure white soap and soft water, put these articles in, stirring well, let them remain until the hand can be borne in the water, then lift each garment or article up and down, squeezing and otherwise manipulating it, but rubbing as little as can be avoided, and only on the soiled places. Squeeze as dry as you can with the hands, or pass through the wringer into a tub of clean water of the same temperature, putting the white flannels through a third water, also hot, and blued. Dry as quickly as possible, pulling into shape while yet damp.

A little ammonia added to the water in which the flannels are to be washed is excellent to prevent shrinkage.

Omelet With Strawberries.

Here is a delicious luncheon omelet, sweet entre or even dessert, and not as extravagant as it would have been a month ago. When you find a nice box of ripe strawberries on the market stand fine in flavor and reasonably cheap, invest and buy also half a dozen of the freshest eggs. Pick over your berries, saving out about half of the finest solid ones. Cut these in half, put into a bowl and add two large tablespoonfuls of sugar, mixing with a little grated orange peel and a dash of lemon juice or grape-fruit. Set in refrigerator while you wash the remainder of the berries through a fine sieve, and sweeten well. Make an omelet of the six eggs, and when ready to fold over, fill with the sliced berries drained from all juice. Turn the omelet out on the dish, dust generously with powdered sugar and serve at once. A dash of rum may be added to the berries if desired. A little grated nutmeg is liked by some.
