FICTION

The Grays—Charlotte Bacon.

A story which condemns the egotist with the artistic, yet withal, a story full of gay youth and ripe wisdom—and above all that "sense of fitness" which we call good taste.

Debutante—McClosky.

Written in the favorite diary form, it jogs along rapidly thru the days of a social butterfly. Egotism of an individual sort, high and numerous romances and a bit of feminine philosophy make it entertaining.

Conquistador—K. F. Gerould.

A captivating story of Mexico steeped in the fascination of Mexican raids, strong romance and a background as rich as old tapestry.

Voice at Johnny Water—B. M. Bower.

A ranch triumphs over the movies resulting in a good mystery story wherein Gary's suppressed desires to become a screen favorite come to the fore in a series of high speed adventures.

Tale of Triona—W. L. Locke.

An old secret comes to mar the supreme happiness of the Trionas. The struggles of a wife's fight for her husband's honor and her final supremacy make it a beautiful romance.

Cole of Spyglass Mountain—A. P. Hankin.

According to the review, this story of one Joshua Cole will make you oblivious even to the income tax. Possessed of an indomitable spirit of winning, he wins as a reward, happiness and the desired Madge. Highly entertaining.

Marriage Verdict—Frank Spearman.

Taking up the problem of marriage and divorce for its theme, this little novel will appeal to the thoughtful reader of fiction.

Desolate Splendour—Michael Sadlier.

An austere story of a formidable old woman and the house of Plethorn. Perverted cruelty, lust for property and the futility of a girl's devotion form the threads of this recent story by the author of Privilege.

Clue of the New Pin—Edgar Wallace.

Another mystery story with the inevitable death and the shadows form the past. Queer characters, locked vaults with no handle to open the door and a beautiful girl more than usually mysterious.

Ironheart—W. M. Raine.

Adventure and romance of the great outdoors of which Bidloss writes so freely. Tug Jones, an ex-army officer, is a down and outer with just enough that is fine in him to fight his way back. His struggle for the captaincy of his soul forms the plot.

NON-FICTION

Policeman—C. F. Cahalane.

The duties of a policeman are definitely laid out. A splendid textbook on the gentle art of upholding the law.

Art of the Prima Donna—F. H. Martens.

Galli-Curci, Bori, Jerizita, Homer and Hemphill among others, discuss themselves with delightful frankness and personal charm. They speak of their art, their friends, and their ambitions. It will be of highest possible interest to music lovers.

United States and the League—Dickinson.

A timely book on that much discussed subject that will give you a definite understanding upon the question—Why the original purpose to join the league was defeated; How the actual honor of the United States is involved.

Maturity of Riley—Dickey.

The life story of one of the best loved poets of America with a full account of his golden age of achievement. A remarkable compilation of material presented with deep sympathy and understanding.

Damaged Souls—Bradford.

The seven to whom the adjective in the title is applied are Benedict Arnold, Thomas Paine, Aaron Burr, John Randolph, John Brown, P. T. Barnum and Ben Butler. Written with great gusto by one of the most noted biographical essayists this book will be of great delight to many.

Creative Salesmanship—Hess.

A straightforward discussion of the problem of future business—a large part of which is salesmanship. Direct advice couched in simple compelling language.

Veiled Women of Stamboul—Brown.

An interesting and informative account of the social conditions existing among the better class of Turkish women. It shows, too, the result of woman's work in the political field.

Powder of Sympathy—Morley.

A delightful hour or two with a man who has the ability to find charm in the everyday things of life. There are chatty little essays on everything from "Santayana in the Subway," to "Some Recipes."

The Doctor Looks at Literature—Collins.

An amazing revelation by a noted neurologist upon the harmful efforts the writing disciples of Freud are having upon modern literature. He discusses such authors as D. H. Lawrence, Rebecca West, Katherine Mansfield and others.

Poems from Punch 1909-1920—Henderson.

A compilation whose purpose is to serve the Comic spirit. Bright, amusing little things, many of them.

Rutgers Offers Big Summer School Program

Plans for the coming Rutgers Summer Session are being completed very rapidly. Advance registrations arrive in every mail and the institution "On the Banks of the Old Raritan" is prepared to render an exceptionally broad and effective service during the coming summer.

When asked about the special opportunities offered at Rutgers, the Director Dr. Charles H. Elliott had this to say: "We are much gratified to find that so many persons will avail themselves of the opportunities offered. Our summer session membership is about three times what it was a few years ago. We are offering many courses for college and graduate students, several complete programs for elementary teachers and are given the responsibility for training supervisors in physical training, music, public school drawing and manual training. One feature which has been added is a "Tone Laboratory" which will enable students to practice French and Spanish through the medium of specially constructed phonograph records."

Five More Permits Issued for Buildings

According to the report of the Building Inspector there have been five more permits issued within the past week for the construction and alteration of homes in Ventnor. All of these houses are to be small family homes, the largest one of which will be the brick and frame cottage now being erected at 18 South Wissahickon Avenue. The Kandle and Ott Company are both the owners and the contractors. Thirteen thousand dollars is the estimated cost of the project. Next in the sequence of value is a similar home to be built for Mrs. Ida Clymer at 122 North Cambridge Avenue that is to cost $8,000. W. Van Sant is the contractor.

In all, the total amount of money expended upon constructive work during the last seven days is $24,000.

The permits issued from the office of the Building Inspector are as follows:

W. S. Beaumont for William Riddle, to make alterations to back of house at 106 South Cambridge Avenue that will include the building of a sun parlor and bathroom, to cost $1,000.

Kandle and Ott for Kandle and Ott, to build a brick and frame cottage at 18 South Wissahickon Avenue, to cost $13,000.

H. W. Eive for Henry K. Kraan, to build a double garage of cement block in back of the house at 106 South Troy Avenue, to cost $1,000.

J. C. Hampton Son for A. Blitzstein, to build a one-car garage along side of the home at 7 South Surrey Avenue, to cost $1,000.

W. Van Sant for Mrs. Ida Clymer, to construct a brick and frame cottage with a garage at 122 North Cambridge Avenue, to cost $8,000.

nouncement to housewives. In order that consumers may have an opportunity to enjoy each kind of fruit, berry or vegetables during the entire period it is available, the bureau has adopted the policy of reporting for consumers, the various crop conditions and marketing movements.

Peas, early cabbage and string beans are heading the vegetable list at this time. Asparagus is still in strong demand. Dry weather has greatly reduced the pea crop and while in some favored sections the crop is in better condition, the prices range above normal.
