CORNBREAD IN THE SOUTH

May Be Out of Fashion North, But the South Delights in Its Eternal Virtues.

In response to Champ Clark's advice that there should be a greater use of corn as food, the epicure of the New York Sun makes this sage observation concerning cornbread:

"It was well thought of in this country as human food 50, 40, perhaps 30 years ago. But in an unfortunate day even poor folk began to neglect corn. Dressed up as hominy it still had a certain popularity, parents were willing that their children should eat it thus. Treated with baking powder, salt, plenty of rich cream and butter, it was still made into a hot bread some were not ashamed to eat."

This serves chiefly in this part of the country to show how little the South and Southerners are computed as a part of the country, and how little they know in New York and other supposed enlightened centers of what constitutes good eating.

It is assuredly not necessary to use the past tense when corn as human food is spoken of in the South. Cornbread is used preferably by thousands of well-to-do people of the South, in the cities and towns, as well as in the rural sections.

We know the virtue in this region of the pone, the hot corn muffin and of "eggbread," which, if our brethren of the North ever knew, they are unfortunate to have forgotten.—Nashville Banner.

When Novels Were Really Long.

Though William de Morgan wrote some of the longest novels of recent times, his efforts were conciseness itself compared with the works of some of the seventeenth century romancers. Mme. de Scudery's once famous story, "Le Grand Cyrus," for instance, fills five folio volumes of 500 pages each in the English translation, and her contemporary, La Calprenede, was even more diffuse, his "Cleopatre" running into 23 volumes. The leisurely method of the early novelists is well illustrated in "Parthenissa," by Roger Boyle, Earl of Orrery, in which the eight hundredth page finds the two chief characters still engaged in the process of introducing themselves to each other.

Salt in Cake.

Young housekeepers may safely remember that salt "goes in" everything. Scarcely a single recipe for cake calls for salt, and yet the lack of it causes the raw taste of cake done to a turn by all the signs. A scant teaspoonful of salt can be put in a usual size cake.

By ELIZABETH SHIELDS.

Her hair was golden and her large, inquiring eyes were brown. They flashed with great hopes and the wonderful dreams of youth. She arrived in New York with the conviction that an amazing adventure was waiting for her each time she turned a corner. She lived alone for one week in the goal city of the United States and, of course, it happened. On the first day of her second week's stay in the old-fashioned brown-stone boarding house, she descended the dark, musty-smelling halls, with the dim gas jets burning to the dining room for luncheon.

Claire was not only dewy, fresh and rosy, she had cultivated an air of dash and she was wistful, but of this latter quality she was utterly unconscious. When she entered the dining room she found a stranger at her table. New York is overfilled with pretty girls, but Gilbert Brown sat up when he looked

National Guard Is Still Open to Men Liable for Draft

Young men who have been designated as liable for the first increment of the national army, the regular army and national guard, still have the privilege of enlisting as volunteers in the regular army and national guard. They will have that privilege just a few days longer until they are summoned to report for the physical examination.

Provost Marshal General Crowder's announcement that those who have been drafted for the first increment may enlist voluntarily in the national guard or regulars gives young men, who surely know that they must serve, the opportunity to serve with other young men from their city and state.

It gives them the opportunity of keeping in closer touch with the folks at home when they are at the front.

They should enlist in the New Mexico national guard.—Albuquerque Journal.

Discovering Columbus.

During a recent campaign a Tammany leader on the East side, a self-made man and one not entirely completed yet in some parts, was addressing a mass meeting of Italian-born voters on behalf of his party's ticket.

"Gentlemen and fellow citizens," he began, "I deem it an honor to be permitted to address you upon the issues of the day. I have always had a deep admiration for your native land. I venerate the memory of that great, that noble, Egealman who was the original discoverer of this here land of ours.

"Why, gentlemen, at my mother's knee I was taught to sing that inspiring song, 'Columbus, the Jim of the Ocean!'"

Whereupon there was loud applause.—Saturday Evening Post.

Another Astonishing Trait.

"Washington must have had a wonderful memory, father," said the bright boy.

"Why so, my son?" asked the father, who was showing his son around.

"Because, everywhere I go I see monuments to his memory."—People's Home Journal.

at Claire.

Claire looked him over completely without, apparently taking her eyes from the cream pitcher in front of her. He was too big, she decided. She shrank from men so broad and with such square chins. There was something so delicate about her, she seemed a little beyond Gilbert Brown, but he started to talk anyway.

Luncheon finished, they went up the stairs to a still gloomier room, known as the library. After another half-hour's acquaintance he felt free to inquire, "Haven't you anyone to look after you?"

She answered with a lilted laugh, "No one's ever taken care of me. I only have Aunt Annie, who was glad I came to New York."

"Go back home, child," he warned her; "you won't stand being banged about here."

She gave the man a long, speculative glance. "I haven't any home to go to," she laughed lightly, dismissing the subject forever. A thought flashed into her golden head that here was a chance for adventure. She wanted to dance and dine in the restaurants, and her week in New York proved that she probably never would, unless she went alone. She astonished the man by telling him this. All her girlish desires for experience beamed trustfully from her brown eyes as she talked.

"I'll take you to a show," he offered eagerly. "First, we'll have dinner with a cabaret, then a show after," he urged.

Still Claire hesitated. The opportunity so suddenly presented took her breath away. His eyes were burning into hers in an uncomfortable way. The temptation to seek adventure was too strong to deny.

Upstairs in the tiniest hall bedroom ever built into a boarding house Claire dressed for the evening, aglow with the wonder of the adventure on which she was starting.

When she met Brown her eager brown eyes looked directly into his. Her tight grasp on his arm gave him the feeling of being a protector in a deeper sense than ever before. She carried her head high, animated with the joy of living. She intoxicated Brown.

The cheap dazzle of Broadway wearied him, but Claire laughed up at him in childish excitement.

"Do you like this sort of thing?" he questioned wonderingly.

"I can't thank you enough for taking me," she chirped; "it's all more beautiful than I ever dreamed, much more wonderful!"

She started for home willingly when he suggested it.

"You must not come again," he cautioned her; "other men will ask you."

"But I want to come again," she protested.

Secretly Brown made up his mind that in the morning he would look up the first train to her home town and see that she took it, if he had to take her to the station himself. Aloud he said, "You're the nicest little girl I ever saw!"

Claire placed her soft palm over his mouth.

"You've told me every minute that I'm pretty."

He caught her hand and held it. He knew he should drop it, but she looked at him with bright, happy eyes and smiled. Brown's heart always ruled his head, and at the touch of her soft little arm against his, he drew her close to him. He covered her face with kisses.

"I want you with me always, sweet one," he whispered in a trembling voice. "I don't want to let you go." She put her arms around him and kissed him. Relenting her he drew his breath in sharply. "I shouldn't have talked to you at all. You're too good for men like me. Tomorrow—" he continued.

Smiling sweetly into his face Claire interrupted. "Tomorrow we'll go adventuring again." Brown clenched her hands in his strong grip.

"I don't want to let you go out of my life, but—"

"I shan't. We'll be perfectly happy together." Claire laughed and cuddled closer to him. Then she whispered, "This is my first proposal!"

It was several minutes before Gilbert Brown could speak. In his heart, which was big, he was glad for the innocence of her.

"Little treasure," he murmured, "I'll be a good husband to you."

Then the Ice Formed.

Her—No doubt you think I am older than I really am.

Him—Not at all. I'm sure you are not as old as you look.
