EXECUTIONS.

The most interesting thing about the Mexican revolution is the fact that the capture of some military strongholds has been followed by the execution of commanding officers.

One officer was led to the place of execution and the rebel officers who were charged with killing him became confused. This is the first time that a man has been executed from the ranks since the revolution broke out.

A man with a nerve like that is likely to be too valuable to a country to be shot down before a wall. He is a man who would be worth more to a country than a hundred soldiers.

War is a grim enough business without the barbarous custom of butchering prisoners.

OUR CLIMATE.

The average New Mexico resident becomes accustomed to arising in the morning with bright sunlight coming in through the windows, purring the lungs and a moderate temperature.

The result is that New Mexico does not advertise for climate enough. California has built up her southern cities by advertising her climate.

The mountain elevations in New Mexico are diversified. The climate is the best all the year around.

The most of the New Mexico papers now and then mention the climate of New Mexico but they do so in a matter of fact sort of way.

An American tourist who has just returned from a visit to the territory has been interested in the fact that the people of New Mexico are so much better adapted to the climate.

Mr. Lincoln says after his visit to the territory that he is not going to the territory but the New Mexican agents do it for him.

STILL SEESAWING.

The revolution in Mexico has been a long and hard fought battle. It is still seesawing between the two sides.
