HOSTETTER'S
CELEBRATED

STOMACH
BITTERS

That Terrible Epidemic.

Fever and ague, shatters the most vigorous constitution, and the after effects of the alkaloid often taken to arrest it, quinine, are scarcely less pernicious. The best remedy, not alone in malarial stricken regions of this continent, but also in those portions of South and Central America where malarial fevers are most prevalent and insidious—is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. Its remedial and preventive effects as an opponent of fevers are owing to its tonic influence.

ers generally.

"Doing Up a Husband."

The other evening a policeman noticed a woman of respectable appearance walking up and down in front of a Grand River street saloon, as if waiting for somebody inside, and he finally accosted her with:

"Do you wish to see anyone in there?"

"I should remark!" was her prompt reply. "I've got a husband in there who is fooling away money that ought to be spent in clothes for our children."

"And what are you going to do?"
"In the first place, I want to get him outside. In the next place, I don't want you around here when he comes out. James is sometimes backward about coming forward, and I may have to adopt heroic measures."

"How will you get him out?" Just then a boy whom she had apparently met before and posted came up and she said to him:

"Now you go in quietly and whisper to him that there's a man out here who wants to buy his dog.
He's got a $50 dog and that'll bring him. Officer, you go on!"

The boy went in and the officer passed on to a doorway. It wasn't a minute before the man and the boy came out of the saloon, and the man looked up and down and said:

"Where's the chap who wants to buy my dog?"

"Here he is!" replied his wife as she got between him and the door.

"Henry, come home with me!"

"I won't!"

"You shall!"

"You go back home and wait for me! You've no business following me around!"

"Will you come?"

"No!"

The officer saw a rush and a struggle, and two dark bodies rolled in the gutter, but before he could reach the scene one dark body gasped out:

"Let up on me and I'll go none with you!"

"I knew you would!" answered the other, as she jerked him to his feet.

And then three dark figures moved silently and ghost-like up the avenue, all walking in the middle of the road. One was the man who wanted to sell his $50 dog.
The other was the woman who wanted to buy it. The third was the boy who had acted as a catspaw, and he played sadly on a mouth-organ as he brought up the tail of the procession.—Detroit

A recent article in the New York World relates of a Bostonian worth $20,000,000, that he habitually rides in the rear seat of the car to and from his suburban home, so as to save interest on his car fare, by being the last one for the conductor to reach.

It ought to form a partnership with the young man spoken of in an exchange who is devout at church that he clasps his hands so closely during the prayer that he cannot get them open until after the contribution box has passed him.

Samuel Frazer, according to the New York Herald, lifted a barren waste of smoke-colored intellect above the Jefferson market police court railing and looked sadly at Mrs. Frazer, who was pointing at a lump as big as a doughnut on one chocolate-tinted cheek which she said Samuel's fist had raised there.
The magistrate looked incensed.

"Frazer, you and your wife were here over a year ago."

"Yessah."

"She was stouter and more robust then?"

"Yessah."

"She was less careworn?"

"Yessah."

"She was younger and more kindly looking?"

"Yessah."

"You're the cause of this."

"Yessah, I'm 'sponsible for marryin' dis 'ooman. De udder nu yon means done gone dead dese ten muns."

"What? Taken another for better or worse in that time? Well, you ought to be satisfied."

"I am satisfied, yo 'onah," said Samuel, solemnly. "Dis un's wuss."

A Surprised Young Man.

A Boston man residing at the Highlands, having succeeded in saving quite a sum of money, resolved one evening last week to go in quest of amusement. He found it, and reached home in the early hours of morning in an inebriated condition. After he had been in bed a short time he was rudely awakened from his slumbers, only to discern by his bedside the stern visage of his father.

"Where is the child you have secreted in this room?" the latter asked.

Cy thus time, thoroughly aroued, partly by astonishment caused by the question, he faltered, "What child?"

"There is no use denying it," replied the old gentleman; "I distinctly heard the voice of a small child coming from this room."

At that instant the voice of a baby, coming directly from the side of the young man, was heard.
Horror struck, he quickly turned down the bed clothes, when the form of a child about six months old was brought to light. The old gentleman, after inquiring about his son's whereabouts the previous evening, sent the infant to the home on Cardon street. The young man, it may be said, was unmarried, and was ignorant as to the manner in which he obtained the child, but had a faint recollection of placing something in bed on his arrival home. He has left off drinking, having signed the pledge.
He says that it is bad enough to see snakes when he gets drunk, but when he finds himself in possession of a baby, then it is time to leave off drinking.—Boston Herald.

An English scientist says the earth's surface is slowly changing, and what is a valley to-day may be a mountain a million years hence. A man who contemplates erecting a residence in the valley should remember this, and be prepared to find his house on the top of a high mountain in the year 1,001,885.—Ex.

What a Small Boy Did With a Nickel.

Two little Upper Maine street boys are laying siege to the heart of a wee damsel who sits on the front seat at the primary school, and who is dividing her attention between both of her admirers, who are dead in love. A funny thing was that which one of them did one day this week. His papa gave him a nickel for being boy. He didn't buy candy, although that was the original plea by which he obtained the nickel. Not at all. He went over poste haste to the abode of his little lady and gave her the money on condition that she would hold his hand and his hand alone on the way to school the next day.

The trade was struck, and the next morning the programme was carried out. The fond mother of the little Miss saw, as the result of this secret transaction, one tearful little boy in a blue blouse waste skirt weeping bitter tears over the front yard fence, while down the street, in proud consciousness of having enchered a dreaded rival, marched the other boy hand in hand with the little girl. Both were called back, and it was a less joyous trio that next went up the street. The father has great hopes of his boy who struck the bargain.

A Solemn Question.

A distinguished Boston divine of unusually solemn and impressive appearance went out to a country town not long ago to lecture.
He arrived early in the afternoon, and all the town, of course spotted him within five minutes as a very saintly man.

He went into a drug-store, and, in tones that froze the blood of the young clerk behind the counter,
said:

"Young-man-do-you-smoke?"

"Y—yes, sir," said the trembling clerk; "I'm sorry, but I learned the habit young and haven't been able to quit it yet."

"Then," said the great divine, without the movement of a muscle or the abatement of a shade of the awful solemnity of his voice, "can you tell me where I can get a good cigar?"—Boston Record.

Judge Henderson is evidently a man who understands his business. His charge to the grand jury at Hillsboro indicated that he had not only had previous experience but that he will make one of the best judges the territory has ever had. He has lifted the veil from some of the corruption of Sierra county and there can be but little doubt but that he will do the same thing next month in this county. The practice of officials taking money in lieu of bringing indictment against parties for various offenses will be carefully looked into and it is expected that there will be some very interesting developments in the course of the investigation.—Headlight.
