There has been some suggestion of a sort of dual management of the campaign, in which Mr. Daugherty, representing the nominee, might cooperate with the National Committee chair, but this has caused some interest because of the Ohio factional situation.

President Said to Be Creating Situation Whereby He Could Step In

HIS FITNESS CLAIMED

White House Maintains Significant Silence in Face of Reports.

M'ADOO'S STAND IS TOLD

Differs With Father-in-Law and Retires in Spirit of Loyalty.

Special to THE SUN AND NEW YORK HERALD

WASHINGTON, June 19.—That President Wilson really is flirting with the possibility of receiving the Democratic Presidential nomination for a third term at the San Francisco Convention is the slowly developing opinion tonight in Washington.

That he is leaving the door open preparatory to stepping in at the proper time with a view of walking off as the party standard bearer to make his own fight for his own League of Nations is the only deduction shrewd politicians, Democrats and Republicans alike, are able to draw from the chain of remarkable circumstances that have come to pass within the last few days.

The discussion of Mr. Wilson as a third term possibility seemed to be the exclusive subject among politicians. The White House maintained strict silence, but close friends of the President took no steps to end the wide speculation. This situation in itself, almost on the eve of the convention, has its significance.

In well informed circles the story went the rounds that the unexpected withdrawal from the race of William G. McAdoo was at the instance of the President. The story even went so far as to say Mr. Wilson had insisted that Mr. McAdoo step out of the contest in order to throw the field wide open with the prospect that the convention would get into such a tangle over candidates that the renomination of the President would be the only possible course to follow.

Support for The Story

In support of this story politicians called attention to the fact that the 1022 delegates it is necessary for the winner to receive the votes of 723, or two-thirds, of the candidates now in the field it is hard to figure how any of them will be able to get anywhere near this number of votes early in the game.

A complete deadlock, running the convention into many ballots, would seem to be a condition from which there would be no escape, particularly if the dominating candidate, as Mr. McAdoo had been regarded, were eliminated.

Such a condition, according to Mr. Wilson's method of figuring, might make it logical that his name should be presented as a solution to the problem of carrying on the convention would nominate him, of course, is an entirely different matter.

There are many Democratic leaders who believe Mr. Wilson, even if he came out in the open nomination, could not receive the nomination.

However that may be, the outstanding factor remains that nobody doubts that Mr. Wilson if he were nominated would accept. He is unwilling to announce himself as an avowed candidate, but if the convention was fit to put him up as the leader he would welcome the opportunity of carrying to the country what he regards as a referendum for the League of Nations without essential reservations.

The World interview, which had the approval of the White House before it saw print, left the distinct impression that Mr. Wilson is physically capable of carrying on the work of Chief Executive. It is understood that photographs of the President are to be printed soon to further convey the idea of the physical fitness which has been described.

Wilson's View Reported

Those who regard it as a possibility that Mr. Wilson really is seeking renomination believe that he is of the opinion that no great campaign would be required to win on the League of Nations platform. There is no question about Mr. Wilson's inability to take the stump, but he still has his typewriter and there still is a sting to his writing.

Senator Brandegee (Cons.) had interestingly made a plan to force the nomination of Mr. Wilson by making the Wilson attitude toward the League of Nations an unresolvable issue in the campaign. It was calculated, he insisted, to force all other candidates out of the way and leave the field to the President.

President Brandegee insisted, and in this he is not without considerable Democratic support, that the President is perfectly willing to accept the nomination if it is offered.

There is no doubt that Mr. Murphy and the Governor were pleased at his suggestion in the Washington dispatches of THE SUN AND NEW YORK HERALD yesterday that the Senate would be discussing the possibility of running the New York Governor for Vice-President, with Mr. Marshall at the head of the ticket.
