

Crouch & Fitzgerald present this English style collapsible Kit Bag as a typical example of their Bench Wrought Luggage, which is made as it has been made for more than eighty years.

This Bag is 20 inches long, 10½ inches wide at the bottom, and 14 inches high to top of frame. The leather is selected five ounce cowhide, which was tanned in oak bark liquor, is grained, and is superbly tough and flexible.

The frame is of heavy steel, carefully hinged and adjusted. The leather is attached in the old-fashioned, closely hand-stitched way, with pure linen thread, hand-waxed. The seams are finished with strong all-leather welts. The lining is specially woven checked serge, of great tensile strength.

The locks and catches are of suitable weight. They are of brass, dull finished, and are affixed with solid brass rivets, by hand. The handles are of Crouch & Fitzgerald design, very easy to hold, padded with leather, and closely hand stitched. They are attached by broad leather loops, stitched through the sides of the Bag. In addition, each handle loop is secured to the steel frame of the Bag by a solid brass rivet passing through a steel loop which is concealed by the leather.

On the inside of the Bag are two full length pockets, to be used for shirts or papers. Opposite this are six pockets of convenient size and shape for holding all essential toilet articles. Six massive brass buttons protect the bottom of the Bag.
