MONTE WATERBURY, POLO EXPERT, DIES

American Captain in International Series Suffered From Heart Disease.

Special to THE SUN AND NEW YORK HERALD. PHOENIX LAKE SPRINGS, Ind., Aug. 28.—James M. Waterbury, Jr., famous polo player and captain of the American team which went to England in 1914 to compete for the International Cup, died suddenly here to-day. He arrived at the Springs yesterday, seeking improvement in his health. He had been suffering from heart disease for a year.

James M. Waterbury, Jr., known as "Monte" Waterbury, was 45 years old, and came from an old New York family. For fifteen years he had been prominent as a polo player, he and his brother Lawrence becoming well known by their appearance in a number of international matches.

"Monte" was considered one of the ablest polo players this country ever produced. He had been out of the game since 1914, when he was captain of the team which lost the International Cup to England. For a year he had trouble with his heart brought on by his strenuous career at polo.

As No. 3 on the team which took the cup from England in 1909, Waterbury first gained an international reputation as a polo player. The cup had been in England for twenty-three years. The team in 1909 were the Waterbury brothers, Harry Payne Whitney and Devereux Milburn.

In 1911 England came over to try to win back the cup, but was defeated. "Monte" Waterbury receiving a large share of the credit for America's victory. England was defeated in her attempt to lift the cup in 1913. It was in the last period of this match that Capt. Risson of the English team accidentally killed Waterbury on the wrist and forced him to retire. He never played with his old brilliancy after that accident, and in 1914 England took the cup.

As a player Waterbury was noted for his horsemanship, his almost uncanny ability to handle his mount attracting much admiration. He was an exceptionally hard and accurate hitter.

"Monte" Waterbury was the son of James M. Waterbury, who made a fortune in the cordage business. The elder Waterbury has been retired for several years and now lives on an estate in Westchester. There were eight Waterbury children.

Among the clubs to which "Monte" Waterbury belonged were the Meadow Brook, Knickerbocker, the Brook, Racquet and Tennis Club and the Piping Rock. When in this city he lived at 153 Madison avenue.
