Outside Trading Stops When Stock Exchange Operations Are Suspended.

Trading in the outside market was suspended at quarter past 13 yesterday following the action of the New York Stock Exchange, which suspended its operations as the result of the explosion in the financial district. At the time of the explosion there was a lull in the market, but considerable confusion followed. The market place was just out of range of the falling glass, and the time for the building of the market was the time of the official closing, stocks displayed a steady upward movement among which Standard Oil, National City Bank, and General Asphalt stood out prominently.

BRITISH TURNING

Timber Trade Exhibition Does Much to Stir Interest Throughout Empire.

The Timber Trade Exhibition, arranged by the Department of Overseas Trade, did much to increase public interest in the reforestation not only of Great Britain, but of the whole Empire. Many beautiful and useful woods in various stages of manufacture were displayed, and some idea of the extent of the exhibition is given by the fact that over 600 different varieties of wood are to be seen.

The exhibit which attracted most attention was that of the Indian empire. India possesses all in its plains, hill country and the mountainous region of the Himalaya, a wealth of timber trees, the value of which, though probably unsurpassed in any other country in the world, is almost unknown and unrecognized commercially in the United Kingdom.

Of the 196 specimens exhibited only one—pandanus—has hitherto been seen or used in England. It would require an expert to describe the beautiful timbers and the uses they have been put to, but a passing reference to a few may give some idea of their beauty and suitability for ornamental purposes. The Indian alga wood of a soft rose-pink color, tinged with streaks of mauve or purple, is used in the manufacture of small fancy work. Indian yellow heart, used for the manufacture of chairs, is of a bright orange yellow color with dark green or black veins.

Only the luxuriant steeped forests of the tropics produce a wood of such rare and handsome coloring as laurel wood, which is of a golden to grayish brown color, with deep streaks and a brilliant, glossy sheen. Indian Andaman marblewood, hard, smooth and cold to the touch, glossy and lustrous when polished, resembles marble to a surprising degree. The valuable ebony that finds a counterpart in the black walnut of India, although it is somewhat darker than the European wood, of a bright amber shade, having a fine, wavy grain, is a beautiful texture, and can be used as a substitute for satinwood. It appears to advantage in carved moldings for fine decorative work, and has distinctive appearance in brush and mirror backs. In striking contrast to the quiet browns and grays of so many timbers is the brilliant crimson to vermilion Andaman padding, a wood of a most handsome and effective wood for cabinet work and all decorative purposes.
