

MATRIMONIAL MISERY.

We commend the following communication of a fair correspondent to the attention of the old and young, of both sexes—to some for edification to others for proof:

A correspondent of one of your contemporaries having treated this subject in a powerful, but, as I deem, one-sided manner, I propose to offer my views in relation to the matter.

Admitting the general fact that very many, if not the majority of marriages are unhappy, we dispute the proposition that this unhappiness is usually the cause of the husband; and most women are, when first married, soft, pliable creatures to be moulded to good or ill by the master hand of the husband, and that most men, by their bad treatment, pervert the nature of their wives, and thus introduce domestic discord.

Another source of matrimonial happiness is the fact that people generally do not marry young enough. Men are deterred by an exaggerated idea of riches, and women postpone until they can "better themselves" pecuniarily.

The notion that it is imprudent for very young persons to marry, is totally fallacious. Experience has proved this in innumerable cases. As soon as a young man is able to support himself, he is able to support a wife, and the sooner he takes one the better.

Such might have been the history of hundreds of surly, selfish old bachelors, and sour, snappish old maids, if they had only been more wise and less prudent.

He who marries for beauty only, is like a buyer of cheap furniture—the varnish that caught the eye will not endure the fireside blaze.

Gen. Jackson and J. Q. Adams. The following account of the rencontre between Gen. Jackson and John Q. Adams, at President Monroe's levee, on the night after Adams' election over Jackson for the Presidency, by the House of Representatives, is taken from "Peter Parley's Recollections of his Lifetime."

"I shall pass over the individuals present, only noting an incident which respects the two persons in the assembly who most of all others engrossed the thoughts of the visitors—Mr. Adams, the elect, General Jackson, the defeated. It chanced, in the course of the evening, that these two persons, involved in the throng, approached each other from opposite directions, yet without knowing it.

"The man whose feet was so enormously large that he had to put on his pants over his head, has recently joined the woman's rights party, and has wisely determined to wear a shawl."

"The only class of men in the world who are not in the habit of disparaging their neighbors, are the assessors of taxes; for it is well known they never underestimate anybody in the slightest degree."

"An exchange has discovered that Schottische is a corruption of the Scotch 'itch,' and that the fatuous dance owes its name to the resemblance of its motions to those of a person afflicted with the Scotch plague aforesaid. Awful!"

"I received your thoughts as tho'ts, and treat your desires like children."

"Well," said Mr. Adams in a harsh way—"I suppose she can't hear my head now!" This poor farmer slunk back like a hushed unicorn feeling the smart, but utterly unconscious of the provocation.

"What are you staring at, sir, may I ask?" said an imperial, majestic, mottled "blood" to a "Hoosier" on a Mississippi steambot, who had been watching him as a cat watches a mouse, for some fifteen minutes.

"A Frenchman who was exhibiting some relics and other curiosities, produced among visitors was 'De sword that Balaam had, when he would kill deuss.' A spectator remarked that Balaam had no sword, but only a stick for one—Ver well, this is de one he wished for."

"At the Broadway Theatre, the other evening, one gentleman pointed out a dandified individual to his friend as a sculptor."

"He may not be the kind of one you mean," said the informant, "but I know that he chiseled a tailor out of a suit of clothes last week."
