THE DISMISSED

BY GEORGE P. MORRIS.

"I suppose she was right in rejecting my prayers. But why, tell me, did she kick me down stairs?"

HALLOCK'S "Discarded."

The wing of my spirit is broken, My day star of hope has declined; For a mouth not a word have I spoken That's either polite or refined.

My mind's like the sky in bad weather, When mist-cloths around us are curled; And, viewing myself altogether, I'm the veriest wretch in the world!

I wonder about like a vagrant— I spend half my time in the street; My conduct's improper and flagrant, I quarrel with all that I meet.

My dress, too, is wholly neglected, And I'll pull over my brow, And I look like a fellow suspected Of wishing to kick up a row.

In vain I've endeavored to borrow From friends some material aid— For my lamely views we with sorrow, When she thinks of the bill that's unpaid.

Abroad my acquaintances flout me, The ladies cry, "Bless us, look there! And the little boy cluster around me, As sensible citizens stare.

One says he's a victim to Cupid; Another, his conduct is bad; A third, he is awfully stupid; A fourth, he is perfectly mad!

And then I am watched like a bandit, Mankind with me all are at strife; By Heaven, no longer will I stand it, But I'll give 'em an end to my life!

I've thought of the means yet I shudder At dagger, at ruse, or rope; At drawing with lance my blood, or At razor without any soap!

Suppose I should fall in a duel, And thus leave the world with a yell! But to die with a bullet is cruel— Besides, 'twould be breaking the law!

Yet one way remains: to the river I'll fly from the goadings of care; But drown—oh! the thought makes me A terrible death, I declare!

Ah, no!—I'll once more see my Kitty, And parry her cruel disdain— Beseech her to take me in play, And never dismiss me again.

Frightful Railroad Accident.

The Troy times gives the following account of an accident on the 15th inst., at Shushan, on the Troy and Rutland Railroad, New York:

"As the train came in sight of a covered bridge, one mile north of Shushan, the engineer saw a man on the top of the bridge, motioning for him to stop; he immediately reversed his engine with a full throttle, and whistled on the brakes; by the time the engine got to the further end of the bridge, the train came to a dead stop, and the bridge then went down to right, carrying the train with it. The bridge was about 120 feet long and crossed the Batenkill; it was some five feet from the water, and the water is now from four to six feet deep. The train consisted of engine, baggage-car and one passenger car. The train and bridge lay 'promiscuously' about the river, both being a mass of ruin.

There were about thirty passengers on board. The bridge was undergoing repairs, and there was one of the workmen on top of the bridge—the other men were on or somewhere about the bridge. When the train struck the bridge the engineer and fireman saw that it was going down with them, they dropped down against the boiler, and so went down with the engine and bridge. The mail agent tried to open the door, but could not, so they went down. The baggage-man and brakeman went down the platform, and thought there was no use in jumping as it was sure death any way. The passengers and men got out through the rubbish and fragments, some wet and considerably frightened. No one was killed or mortally wounded. The man on the top of the bridge went down with it and was severely injured. The expressman had his head cut badly, and one passenger received some flesh wounds in the face, and one hand was considerably injured. Several other passengers received slight injuries. The cause of the accident was the carelessness of the men who had charge of the repairs of the bridge. They had removed a bolt from the bridge, and had omitted to put out any signals to stop the trains.

A BEAUTIFUL THOUGHT.—When I gaze into the stars, they look down upon me with pity from their serene spaces. Like eyes glistening with tears over the little lot of man. Thousands of generations, all as noisy as our own, have been swallowed by time, and there remains no record of them any more, yet Arcturus and Orion, Sirius and the Pleiades are still shining in their cones, clear and young as when the shepherd first noted them from the plain of Shinar.

What shadows we are, and what shadows we pursue!

A PRABAL SHIP.—Mr Thompson of Kansas, has just completed, so it is stated, a prairie ship or wagon to be propelled by the wind, in which he proposes to make a voyage to the Rocky Mountains. Thirty passengers will embark in June next, on the voyage.

Several years ago a gentleman, who then represented the State of Illinois in the Senate of the United States, invented a ship of the same kind, and indulged the belief that the experiment of navigating the prairies of the West by canvas and wind would prove successful. If we remember correctly, the wheels of the concern did move with a stiff breeze, but the realization of the gentleman's hopes was never reached.

WHY HE DIDN'T PLAY.

"No! don't play on any instrument," said our friend, Tom Pringle, in answer to our question. "To tell the truth, I became discouraged by a slight misconception, when I was a young man. I wasn't appreciated, you know, and all that sort of thing."

And over our friend's large honest face stole a look of quiet drollery and amused recollection, which roused our curiosity.

"Well, you see," said he, in reply to an other question, "it was about twenty years ago, when I was studying law, and my brother was a medical student, that we both fancied we had a wonderful talent for music. So John bought a flute, and I a fiddle, and turning one of the attics into a study, we practiced there half the night through. We didn't want any one to know about it, especially our father, who had very strict notions as to the value of time; and to make him think us usefully employed, I had quantities of law books heaped up, and John had a skull and all sorts of bones scattered about."

We knew that up in our study, no one could hear us but Betsy, the housekeeper, and as she was our old nurse, we felt sure she would keep our secret. One morning, after we had been whiling the long night hours away with our music, to our own mutual delight, we came down late to breakfast, looking, I suppose, somewhat unrefreshed.

"You must not study too hard, boys," said our father considerably.

"Yes, sir," said I, gravely.

Just then, Betsy appeared at the door and looked mysteriously at my mother.

"Yes, what is it?" said mother surprised at Betsy's excited manner. "What is it, Betsy?"

"Well, ma'am, I wish to say, ma'am, Betsy always spoke in that short snipping way, when she was called worked up, I must leave you, ma'am."

"Leave me? why?" asked mother.

"Yes, ma'am, it's twenty-five years that I've been with you, ma'am—and it is the boys at last, ma'am. I can't stand it and I ain't going to. It's not Christian-like, ma'am."

"What have the boys been doing?" asked mother.

"It's Mr. John, ma'am, and sometimes I think Mr. Tom helps him. He's got some poor creature upstairs, ma'am, and he tortures him awful. He sneaks and groans all the night through. It is worse nor the leathens. I've stood it for more nor a week. I didn't get a wink of sleep last night, and what that poor creature went through was dreadful. I know they say such things must be done by doctors, but I ain't going to stay where it is, and I never thought that John was the one to do it."

And here Betsy gave my brother a look of withering condemnation.

My mother was acute enough to know that something unusual was going on in our study, and telling Betsy that she would inquire into it, dismissed her for the present.

That was the end of our musical practice, though not the end of the tale, for our father took care we should not forget it. It was a long time before we heard the last of the poor creature up stairs.—N. F. Dutchman.

ART OF MILKING.

The art of milking well is not taught in a hurry. It requires long practice to milk properly, and therefore all the young people on a farm ought to be shown how the labor should be done. It is quite important that this branch of the dairy should be particularly attended to, for a good milkman obtains at least a quart more from the same cow than a poor milkman.

The first lesson to be taught to young people is gentleness and kindness to the cows. They never need be treated harshly in case the business is properly commenced. Cows that have been caressed and uniformly well treated, are fond of leaving the milk drawn from the udder at the regular time of milking, for it gives them relief from the distensions of the milk ducts.

Let young people be taught to milk the farrow cows first, or such as are soon dried and then the loss from bad milking will be less injurious. The hand should extend to the extremity of the teats, for the milk is then drawn easier.

Young people should be taught to milk as fast as possible. More milk is always obtained by a rapid milker than a slow one. They should therefore be taught to think of nothing else while milking, and conversation be permitted in the milk yard. They should sit up close to the cow and rest the left arm gently against her flank. Then if she raises her foot, as she sometimes will, merely to change position, she will not be likely to put it into the milk pail.

In case of a disposition to kick or rather to raise her foot on account of pain occasioned by sores of the teats, the nearer the milker sits to her and the harder he presses his left arm against her leg the less risk will be run of being injured.

Cows may be taught to give down at once—and they may be taught to hold it a long while, and to be stripped infrequently. The best way is to milk quick and not use the cow to a long stripping.—Northern Farmer.
